MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST

MAGICAL GIRL
NOT CROSS A MAGICAL GIRL WITH NOTHING TO LOSE DO NOT CROSS A MAGICAL
NOIR QUEST

THE WHOLE BLOODY AFFAIR

Introduction:

Hello. I won’t take much of your time.

This is it – every single thread, collated into a single PDF file. It’s ridiculously long – roughly 18,000 pages by my estimate, and 400MB of storage, give or take. And that’s every thread – not just MGNQ and Deculture’s story, but every single image, every moonquake, every Chikuwa, and every costly decision and daft comment made by you, the readers.

If you read this as of the date I upload this – late 2025 – and you’re still interested in MGNQ… Well, you’re in the small minority like myself, keeping the flame alive.

I still think it’s bloody brilliant. I hope you enjoy it as much as I did; and I hope Deculture remains proud of what he accomplished so many years ago now.

Without further ado, without any guidance or advice on reading, I present quite possibly the last “best time of the day”:

Magical Girl Noir Quest – The Whole Bloody Affair.

You fell asleep in your costume again.

It might have mattered, long ago. Long ago you might have been relieved to transform out of it after a hard day's work. You might have been relieved to get back to your normal life, as a normal girl, with normal problems.

After a while you just stopped caring. The costume stays on. You don't even sleep much anymore, only in the times when your body finally decides to shut down. Or at least until you realize that you've gone for so long without rest that you were only shooting up hallucinations. Days aren't that much important, anymore. You keep asking for the assigments, even the horrible ones. The ones that even that pocky-fellating bitch wouldn't take.

You look like shit, you feel like shit, and for the second time this week, you've forgotten what your name was. It's at the tip of your tongue, if your mouth didn't taste like blood and stale alcohol at the moment.

What do you call yourself? Hopefully not something stupid again. Mami never really got over how you started calling yourself that name again.

Chiaki Matsuda...? That kinda sounds stylish. A bit too cute for you, but hell, you've called yourself worse before. Other people have called you worse before.

The other names that floated up sounded a bit too silly. Maybe next time, if you wake up forgetting everything again.

You try to smile at yourself. Not much of an improvement, but it'll do.

Your shield...thing. You don't really know what to call it, but you know it's heavy, and you could probably do some damage with it if you smash someone over the head with it. It's constantly clicking inside, like a bomb, but you're not too worried about it exploding.

Upon closer inspection, it looks like it's seen better days. There's a large gash in the middle, like someone had taken an industrial saw to it and tried to cut it in half. The jewel in the center is cracked, and it's showing some of the clicking gears inside.

What are you, Captain America or something?

Seriously, make sure that we have guns. That was the only thing I liked about that anime, that outdated medieval weapons were not better than modern guns which seems to be the trope for any and all anime out there.

What? Stars and Stripes? You're not Captain America. You're not even American. Stop mucking around. You'd probably hurt yourself trying to.

You jiggle with it a bit. It turns slightly, but the gears clicking relentlessly within start to protest loudly, so you leave it alone. You know it'll go away if you cancel your transformation, but you don't feel like it at the moment.

You think about how much more awesome Iron Man is than Captain America. The alcoholism isn't too hot, but hey, you're already down that road anyway.

You check your inventory. You have two small canisters of regular painkillers, enough for four doses. An opened pack of cigarettes, two of which has already been smoked. A metal zippo lighter, which you manage to light after nearly dropping it. Curiously, two crumpled-up 100 dollar bills. Your trusty combat knife, still strapped to your ankle.

Oh, and your clamshell cellphone. It seems to be fully charged and in an annoying pink color. From the screen, you could see that you have two messages.

You light up one first before reading. It doesn't help the horrible taste in your mouth much, but it calms you down, at least. If there were any laser traps to avoid, this'd be handy, too.

You open up your message inbox. The first message comes from a sender registered to your contacts as QB. The other is from an unregistered number.

Strangely enough, your phone is devoid of anything except these two new messages and what appears to be five contacts. There is a diary function, but it's kept locked away by a five-letter password. You leave it alone for now.

You read the messages.

The message from QB reads:

"Make your way to Mami's apartment as soon as you wake up."

Short, terse, commanding. Annoying little parasite, you remember not liking it, and even in your slightly confused state, you don't think that's going to change anytime soon.

The message from the unregistered number is stranger:

"Let it go. Seriously. It's time to move on."

You have no idea what they're talking about, or who's it from. Maybe it's just spam, or a message wrongly sent to your number. Nothing significant, you decide.

In Madoka, yeah. One episode shows that if their Soul Gem goes too far from their body, the body just drops dead, no pulse or breath.

It's meant to make the body more able to take damage so it can participate in the fights it does with witches, since it seems if your soul is no longer attached, you can take hits that'd break bones easily.

Biting into the filter of your nearly-spent cigarette, you stab out a couple of choice expletives from your admittedly limited repertoire as a reply to QB. Quickly accessing the 'draw' function of your phone, you scrawl out something offensive and send it as an attachment.

It's immature and puerile, but you're not in the best of moods. It felt good sending it, in any case.

After a while, you call one of the registered numbers in your contact list. The other end of the line rings a few times, before it is picked up.

"Hello...? Who is this?" A warm, familiar voice comes on, slightly hesitant. "I don't have your number on my contact list, I'm sorry...may I know who's on the line?"

She seems to be alright, much to your relief.

It's great to hear her voice, even if it sounds like she's hesitant to receive your call.

You manage to murmur your new name after a few unsuccessfull tries - your throat is dry, and painfully so - and there's silence at the other end for a few moments before Mami's voice comes on again, all warmth and honey now.

"Chiaki...? That's a...surprisingly pretty name, and I think it's much better than your last one. Murderface doesn't really suit you," she giggles slightly, before concern seeps into her voice. "Are you sure you're alright, er, Chiaki-san...? You sound a bit hoarse..."

"Oh, um. Kyuubey says to come on over, so we can give you your assignment for today. He sounds a bit grumpy today, for some reason...although, you can never really tell with him, can you?"

Another pause. "Chiaki-san, have you had breakfast yet? I'll set an extra place if you haven't."

What do you reply?

"...That's no answer, Chiaki-san. You should eat better." Mami's voice becomes chiding as always. "You shouldn't be drinking so much, and the pills you've been taking...I know you're getting all the tough assignments, but please take care of yourself."

You mumble something resembling an assent. If it was someone else, you'd tell them to take a long walk off a pier wearing cement shoes, but it's Mami. Can't do that to her.

"I'll make sure there's enough left for you when you get here, then. And no, I'm alone here with Kyuubey. Why did you ask, Chiaki-san?"

You mumble something else, and try to end the call there. Mami lets out a sigh, before she bids you goodbye.

"I'll wait for you then, Chiaki-san. See you."

The call ends, and you stash your cellphone back into your inventory. That went better than you expected it to.

You decide to get yourself ready, just in case. It doesn't hurt to prepare, and you know you're absolute shit with your knife at any capacity.

As if responding to your thoughts, the heavy shield clamped to your arm clicks a few times, before turning a couple of dozen degrees, locking into place with a clack of metal, before reverting back to its old position.

Automatically, you reach behind it, and feel the handle of an oversized gun fall heavily into your grip. It's a heavy son of a bitch, and you draw it out.

It's not a gun, it's a handcannon. It's seen better days, sure, but it looks functional. The shield doesn't give you a reload, but at least the chambers are full. Eight shots worth.

You remember then that the Shield has always given you strange things to work with. Sometimes it gives you hardware that's easily familiar, other times it's given you strangely-shaped ones that nearly break your wrist after every discharge and have prayer papers affixed to every available surface.

In any case, you have a gun, now. You stash it into your inventory, and make your way to Mami's apartment. At least you remember the way, even if you can't remember what the hell your real name is.

Even before you approach the front door, you realize that something is wrong. The sound of screaming inside is muffled, but clear, interrupted by the dulled thump of what sounds like concussive blasts of force. You can also hear breaking furniture and glass inside.

What do you do?

I know what you’re thinking: "Did he fire six shots, or only five?" Well, to tell you the truth, in all this excitement, I’ve kinda lost track myself. But being this is a .44 Magnum, the most powerful handgun in the world, and would blow your head clean off, you’ve got to ask yourself one question: "Do I feel lucky?" Well do ya, punk?

(On an unrelated tangent, assuming that it is a Taurus Raging Bull 44 Magnum variant, how the hell does it contain 8 shots? Revolvers typically contain 6.)

Things sure went from nice to fucked in a hurry.

Wasting no time, you draw your pistol from your inventory, before rearing up with one heeled foot and smashing it into the locked front door. The wood immediately gives way, splintering under the force, and you immediately grasp your firearm with both hands, one steadying the other, accommodating its weight.

With trigger discipline, of course.

As you enter, the apartment is dimly lit. Strange, because you remember that Mami never closes her blinds - she likes the sunlight to come in from the windows, and she isn't too well with the dark. The sharp stench of blood is all over, and as you step forward cautiously, you become increasingly aware that you're stepping in Incubator flesh.

There is no response.

Kyubey's abilities - Homura legitimately freaks him out on one loop when she timeshifts and he just has no words for Madoka). What he DOESN'T tell her is that he doesn't think it's possible, but he doesn't actually tell her anything that isn't true - he simply tells her that since it's magic, anything is possible, and lets her assume that means it's doable instead of being ridiculously unlikely to happen.

You remind yourself that yelling out Mami's name over and over again isn't going to help, and you bite down on the impulse to do so. Venturing further into the apartment - both hands gripping the oversized gun tightly - you will yourself to move as silently as possible. At the very least, you'll hear the hypothetical knife before it's slid into your back.

Your eyes beginning to adjust to the darkness, you can somewhat make out shapes now, and avoid walking into walls or stubbing your toes into furniture. Keeping your pistol aimed forward, you spy a huddled shape near the doorway leading to the kitchen, while you hear more scuffling and more screaming above you. Upstairs, where Mami's room is.

There's no time to waste on the huddled shape by the kitchen, and you're not going to damage more of Mami's apartment if you can help it.

You move as quickly and as quietly you can upstairs, nearly slipping on a few steps but managing to keep your footing. You realize that whatever's got Mami in her room has left a blood trail - or worse, it's actually hers to begin with.

As you approach the door to Mami's room, only at the last second do you sense someone just about to stab you in the back, the gleam of a knife catching your glasses in the dim light.

What do you do?

Someday, someone will manage to kill you. Put a bullet in your head, shove ten inches of tempered steel right through your spine, you're not particularly concerned how.

All you know is that it will not be today.

Letting your left hand come away with the gun, you spin around to smash your shield into the knife. You feel the blade skitter across the jagged scar of the otherwise-smooth surface of the device, sparks flying at the contact, and it's with a clatter that you hear the sharp implement fall to the floor. Immediately you lunge forward, right hand managing to grab a handful of garment, and you drag whoever it is to the floor with you. A moment's worth of mutual cursing, kicking and struggling, and you end up on top, gun firmly nudging your captive's chest.

You recognize that voice, and it's suddenly clear that you've grabbed someone's cape. White, long and somewhat bloody.

"It's Sayaka, you stupid bitch! Get off of me! Mami-san's in danger! And point that thing somewhere else, for fuck's sake!"

What do you do?

Your blood up at this unexpected, adrenalin-filled altercation, you resist the temptation of pistol-whipping her across the face, and instead settle for calling her a cunt under your breath for nearly stabbing you in the back. You ask, in a louder voice, just what's happening, as you both stand up and compose yourselves.

"I heard that! And no, I don't have any fucking clue! I just..." Sayaka gulps audibly as she looks at the door to Mami's room, before shaking her head. "I just stopped by because QB was going to give me another assignment! It was like this when I got here, and I tried to get to Mami, but something was--hey, wait! Wait a second!"

You've heard enough. Turning your back on your fellow magical girl, you immediately make to force Mami's door open. "Wait a second, you fucking boozehead! We don't know what's in there!"

You tell her to fuck off. You've always wanted to do that.

The door comes away in your second kick, and light floods your eyes. Bright, blinding light--

You immediately recognize it for what it was.

A witch. A freshly-turned monstrosity, still humanoid in form. A witch hat jauntily perched on its darkened skull, its flamboyant outfit dripping ichor. Two oversized pistols of strange origin jutting out from its clawed hands.

Its head snaps up at your approach, and it smiles at you.

"Ho...mura."

You feel the shield heat up at its attention, and the muted clicking inside the device seem to grow louder.

What do you do?

Homura's time travel worked more like a rewinding or consciousness transfer, not a physical shift between timelines, so the fact that there's a physical version of us (whether future or alternate) means it's not following the same rules our time travel usually uses in the first place. It could be either future or alternate-timeline.

Quickly springing forward and interposing yourself between Mami and the Witch, you aim the handcannon one-handedly at the warp-touched figure. It repeats the name with much more relish, seemingly cackling at you.

"CHIAKII-SAN! GET BACK! I'LL HANDLE THIS!"

You can barely hear Mami from the deafening report of her rifles, but even if you could, you definitely wouldn't have followed that order. This witch needed to die, and if it had to take you breaking its face with the gun after you've emptied all eight rounds into it, then so be it.

At this, the clicking inside your shield stops, and it turns a complete 180 degrees - locking into place with a crunching of gears and the slap of metal upon metal.

The world immediately turns gray. Stopping completely, utterly. A dull iron-cast covering everything. Freezing everything in time.

Including the Witch.

But instead of the twisted evil being you saw shambling towards Mami, you see only a young woman, with her blonde hair tied into twintails. Holding onto two pistols, scared out of her wits. Staring at you as if you were death itself. Silently pleading to be saved.

What do you do?

The witch's mark means she's under the control of a witch. She's an innocent being manipulated by magic. We need to disarm and restrain, then track down the actual witch.

Or so I'd say if we were a more noble sort. Homura in-canon is already pretty jaded, and it looks like we're even more far gone in that regard in this quest. Just shoot her.

Your eyes narrow behind your glasses as you glare at the Witch's Mark. It meant that this was no mere accident or turning - someone had planned this. A setup that pretty much resulted in Mami bleeding out and you without the breakfast you've been promised.

Stepping forward, you press the mouth of your gun directly upon the mark, right at the center of the twintailed girl's forehead. You could almost hear her whimper at this, tears welling up in her eyes and falling out, only to be frozen in the air moments later, glistening. Long ago, you probably would have hesitated. You'd have cared to ask who sent her, or tried to find some way to help.

You were looking forward to pancakes, you murmur instead, before pulling the trigger.

The gun kicks in your hand as the hammer blasts forward, igniting the powder, sending the round careening through the barrel, punching through skin, bone, and brain. The entry wound is insultingly small for such a caliber, but the exit wound is a blossoming flower of flesh and blood at the back of the girl's head, frozen in time.

The world resumes its pace, the gray filter lifting, and you close your eyes from the sight of the witch eroding into nothing from the feet up.

Leaving behind a single Grief Seed, its spine embedded into the floor.

"Chiaki...san?" Mami's voice comes around, and you turn to glance at her. She's still bleeding, but it seems that Sayaka's tending to her injuries at the moment. "I...I'm sorry, I didn't..."

You shake your head, and make to stash your weapon away, when you hear a familiar voice. Not in your ear, but in your mind, like a splinter in your brain. Interrupting your thoughts.

"You're late. What's your excuse?" The white furry creature - or rather, a horde of it - scampers into the room, fourteen pairs of eyes swiveling to look up at you. They all seem to be chewing something. "Also, what is this curious creature you drew a picture of? Dickbutt?"

". . ." You're suddenly very tired.

You let the Incubator stew in silence as you sharply nudge up the Grief Seed into the air with the toe of your shoe, catching it with your free hand and pressing it against the Soul Gem on the back of your hand. Purifying the roiling darkness inside it, before tossing the bauble aside, where it's caught by one of the Kyuubeys milling around. Asshole.

The Incubators look up at you, before giving a collective shake of their heads, in perfect syncronization. "Silent as always. I don't know what goes on in your head, but your tardiness almost got Tomoe Mami killed. I do hope you reflect on that."

"N-no, it's not her fault, we didn't know..." Mami protests, wincing at Sayaka's crude application of bandages. It sees that whatever it was had clawed her side open, but thankfully they were merely flesh wounds and nothing more. "S-Sayaka-chan, it's okay. I'll keep. Thank you."

"You shouldn't coddle a junior like her, you know," Kyuubey now chides the blonde magical girl. "We found her in the middle of nowhere with no memory of who she was. She should at least learn to be disciplined."

"She's a good girl," Mami insists, wincing as she now stood up. "And...and she's going to help me clean up, and after that, I'll get her the breakfast she came here for. Right, Chiaki-san?" She smiles at you, bright despite the bloodstains on her face, and the state of her own apartment.

Sayaka glowers at you as you return that smile as best you can (which isn't much, even by your standards).

Kyuubey lets out a sigh. "Very well. Go and do your things. You," the mass of crimson eyes swivel back to focus at you, "Get your assignment dossier from Sayaka afterwards. And please, try not to kill anyone important this time. I'll...I'll go look and see what caused this."

Stupid dickbutt rodent bastard. You'll kill him permanently one of these days.

You are a Magical GIrl.

In the past, you seem to have referred to yourself as Murderface.

Your memory isn't the best. You remember something things faintly, like viewing them through smoked glass. Others you remember startlingly clearly, as if you're there, watching them unfold, replaying over and over again.

One of them being shooting a smiling pink-haired girl in the face, moments after she tore your still-beating heart out from your chest with clawed hands.

You are Chiaki Matsuda, and you are in the seedy bar that's just a few blocks away from your own apartment.

Well, you're not exactly sure, but you have an idea. After what had happened in Mami's apartment - and having spent a good chunk of the day helping her clean up - you had decided to step out for a moment.

Maybe you didn't want to stick around too much. Sure, the food was good, and it felt nice to be around the blonde. But you didn't quite care for the company - namely, the blue-haired bitch glaring at you after every bite. Or the lectures that little rat bastard kept spouting.

You wanted some fresh air, and you ended up where you normally tried your level best to kill your liver.

It's funny how things work out.

The bar doesn't really have a name. It's just a bar, built there to give people a place to try and drown whatever sorrows they have. It's staffed by a tall, dark-skinned man with the biggest afro you've ever seen, and sharp facial hair you swear is tailored to make his furious scowl look like it's taking up 90% of his face.

You check your inventory. Everything's pretty much there, same as the last time. Well, except the money. You already gave that to Charles, the Bartender.

Oh. You have that envelope Sayaka tossed your way. You haven't opened it yet. It's supposed to be your next assignment.

You're...well, you're not drunk. You could be drunk a bit more, though.

You've already drunk your money's worth, but you do have a tab, and Charles still owes you for that time when you solved a particularly nasty problem involving a couple of Yakuzas trying to shoot up the joint. You order a double whisky, and are mere seconds from lighting the cigarettes when you hear the bar doors open behind you, a cheerfully grating voice ringing out.

"Hey! If it isn't ol' Murderface! Still trying to take yourself out the slow way, huh? Alcohol and pills?" The cigarettes end up on the bar, thankfully not into your double, as a hearty slap slams into your back with resounding force. "Heard you actually took out a Witch this time without killing anyone by accident! You're improving!"

Trying to look as if that slap hadn't almost knocked the lungs out of your body, you grab your glass and drain it of whisky, not caring if it burned like hell on the way down. Motioning to Charles for another refill, you place the cigarettes back into your mouth, lighting them simultaneously, before giving her the most withering look you could ever muster.

She only looks back at you, blankly, somewhat confused, and partly waiting for something to happen.

Grumbling about one-eyed idiots, you tuck the envelope underneath one arm and grab your drink. You slide off the bar stool and trod off to a private table at the corner, but to your increasing ire, she follows suit. Just like some sort of one-eyed puppy with a Pocky addiction.

"Well, I guess some things never change. You're still the most rousing conversation partner anyone could get." Kyoko chimes as she annoyingly seats herself from across you, waving at Charles and ordering her own drink. "Come on, don't be sulky. I came around to see how you were doing, after all! The forced fake laughter would've been disturbing anyone else in the bar, if there had been anyone else in the damn bar besides you and Charles. After a few moments' more of fresh denial, she hunkers down and hisses at you, her one good eye glaring.

"I swear, Murderface, make a crack like that again and I'll ambush you myself one of these days." And then, like a switch had been flipped, she grins again just as the bartender brings her drink over. Some sort of red girly drink, you're not sure what it's exactly called. Smells a bit fruity, though.

"But, uh, sorry about that. We're kind of going through a rough patch." Kyoko says, managing to look sheepish as she cautiously sips her drink. You shoot her a look, shake your head, and make to open the envelope. You've ignored it long enough.

"So, uh, what really happened? In Mami's apartment, I mean. One of the Kyuubeys said it was a particularly strong one. How'd you manage that?"

"Huh. Nothing really special, then, I guess." It seems that she's strangely relieved about that, but with your odd one-eyed acquaintance, you can't be too sure. "That's pretty bad luck, though, having one pop up right there. When you're just about to arrive and all."

You glance up at her, before shaking your head again as you unravel the string lock on the envelope, sucking down greedily on the two cigarettes currently occupying your lips.

After a moment of continuing to ruin your lungs and voice, you grumble out your question around your cigarettes, and the girl sitting in front of you reddens somewhat.

"Y-yeah, I guess. I've been trying to quit. Too much sweets and all, costume's getting a bit...tight. " It's then that she brightens up, again. "Hey, give me one of those things. They help make you lose weight, right?"

You shrug, and give her a cigarette from your box, letting her light it up with one of your already-spent ones. As she smokes her first cigarette - coughing and hacking loudly after the very first puff, you pull out the papers inside the envelope. There are two, with a photograph of what looks like a young female idol. You're not into that sort of music, but she does look stupid and two-dimensional enough to be one.

"Huh? Really? W-well, I guess that sort of makes sense..." Kyoko's voice trails off as she thoughtfully nibbles on her cigarette's filter, not exactly breathing in the smoke. You ignore her and look at the assignment Kyuubey has already signed you up for in advance.

The client's name is Minase Iori. Age 16. Apparently, a group of otakus have declared their undying love for her, and had promised to take her away sometime before her upcoming concert. You've been contracted to assist as her personal security detail until she goes to America for the next stage of her world tour. It seems to be a lot of money, and Kyuubey had promised you two grief seeds in return for it.

Not the most challenging of jobs, you suppose. Just another babysitting job. Otakus aren't the most threatening sort, either. You'd think a normal security detail would have sufficed, but her studio seemed adamant that special measures were taken.

Of course, you know that whatever Kyuubey sends your way, it usually turns out to be more than you bargained for.

You're asked to report, as soon as you can, to the hotel where she's staying. You know where it is, and you can get there quickly enough.

"Huh. Babysitting job, huh? That sucks." Kyoko manages to blow smoke right into your face as she offers her unneeded opinion. "Yeah, good luck there. The guys you're watching out for are serious perverts."

[]Ask Kyoko more about these perverts.

Charles just places the bottle of whisky in front of you and leaves you to refill your glass at your own pace, just like every night. Kyoko frowns at your question and perhaps veiled insult, but seems to give it some serious thought (which is rare, considering she's now biting into cigarette filter like it's pocky).

"Well, one of her fellow idols got targeted last month by these losers, some girl named Yayoi or something or other. They didn't really think much about them, just put up the usual security detail, couple of armed gorillas in shades, you know what I mean."

She finally notices that she's chewing on filter, and hastily spits it out. "Bleah! Anyway, turns out they'd been planning it for the longest time. They disguised themselves as hotel staff and locked her in that very room. Security detail didn't even hear a peep out of that place, and you can bet they took their time with her. No one got caught, but the footage hit every pay for porn site there the night after." Kyoko shakes her head. "Girl went into hiding after that. Heard she went insane or somethin'."

Rapists. Wonderful, you think as you drain your third...or fourth glass, you can't remember. All you know is that you've dealt with such folk before, and you usually ended up wasting too much ammo.

"Well, are you gonna take it or what? I wouldn't." The eyepatched girl grumbles. "Two grief seeds, but then again, you're not exactly the type to play white knight. I mean, look at you." She laughs. "It's barely dinnertime and you already smell like booze."

Despite the horror of something from your recurring nightmares coming out into reality and actually talking to you, you manage to say this perfectly, even managing not to spill any whisky down the front of your costume as you drain your glass.

The illusion's smiles merely grow wider as she opens her eyes. Revealing two orbs of pure midnight black, as if her irises had bled out to her sclera in the most horrible way possible.

"Of course your memory's going to be unreliable. Fakes will never be as good as the original, so a few flaws here and there are going to be par for the course. But at the very least, you still remember how to slowly self-destruct. That's something the original was very good at."

She lets out a sigh, and you smell her breath, pungent and sweet with decay and corruption.

"I'm just here to wish you good luck. You have a thirty percent chance of dying on this particular undertaking. Try not to get yourself killed too early, Homura-chan. I mean, I want a rematch, but I'm in no hurry. I like it better when you die slowly."

The phantasm seems to slightly frown at your words, brow quirking as if this reaction was entirely unexpected - but her expression smoothens out to her previous one, her dark eyes glittering. It's then that she leans forward, smiling once more, her small tongue darting out to lick her lips.

"Maybe, Homura-chan. But I can still kill you."

And it's then that you feel it. Crippling, numbing pain, crunching into sensation at the back of your head and then stabbing forward. You grasp at your own head, fingers curling into your hair, as you grit your teeth against the pain. It's familiar, but at the same time something you had hoped never to experience again.

"Hey. Hey! Murderface! MURDERFACE!"

And as suddenly as it came, as soon as you hear Kyoko's voice over the sharp whine ringing in your ears - the pain disappears, taking with it the hallucination. You look up, cautiously, to check if Kyoko is still her ugly, one-eyed self.

She is. For the first time, you seem particularly relieved to see her.

There's a first time for everything, you suppose.

"Hey, hey, you alright? Come on, Murderface, don't scare me like that." Kyoko amusingly almost seems concerned about you. "Look, I-I don't know what sort of shit you're taking, but you gotta cut down. Really. Maybe we can even get you some of them patches for the smokes--"

You shrug her off, murmur an apology, and frown as you realize that you've knocked the whisky bottle off the table and into the floor in this particular episode. You glance apologetically at Charles, and he merely nods. It'll be on your tab.

You murmur something to Kyoko and make to leave, but she grabs your hand.

"Murderface? Murderface, talk to me. What the hell was that about? What happened there?"

You remind her, as politely as you can, that you have a name and it's Chiaki Matsuda.

"I don't give a shit! What was that?! Why did you suddenly blank out on me and started growling all of that strange stuff?! Whatever you're taking, you have to cut down. It's not good."

You're fine. ...Wait, what did she say? You ask her what you said.

"...Something about...something about 'the flesh of fallen angels'. Y-yeah. I mean, I've heard weirder from you, but..."

You stare at her, suddenly feeling cold, and it's then that you roughly pull your hand out of her grasp, grabbing the assignment papers with your other and making to leave.

This shit, you remind yourself, is why you work alone.

And you've apparently just confirmed that God exists, and she wants you dead.

"M-Murderface...? Murderface, get the fuck back here! That is some crazy shit, and--" Kyoko's voice rises the moment you step through the bar doors. "GOD DAMMIT! YOU ALWAYS DO THIS! ALRIGHT, FINE! SEE IF I CARE! SEE IF ANYONE CARES, MURDERFACE! YOU'LL GET YOURSELF KILLED AND EVERYONE YOU LOVE WITH THAT KIND OF ATTITUDE!"

As if you needed reminding.

You stomp off towards the direction you remember that particular Hotel is. Time to get to that job.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You were drunk earlier. Well, you were almost drunk, at least. Probably a few more glasses and you could have had that pleasant warm buzz that just softened everything. Dulled the pain to tolerable levels, turned down the volume some.

Of course, that went down the entire fucking drain when the crazed pink-haired bitch from your dreams popped up just a few inches from your face and told you just how much of a turn-on she found you bleeding slowly to death on the ground.

Now you're sober, and irritatingly so. Four hours of drinking, gone to pot, just like that.

Well, no matter. At least it helped you get to the Hotel quicker. It's no Ritz, but a night's stay here is definitely out of your pay bracket. The in-room peanuts probably cost more than a typical salaryman's monthly wages.

Surprisingly, the front of the hotel is devoid of guards, as is the lobby, and the elevators. You make a mental note of this as you ride one up to the penthouse, where you're supposed to be reporting.

As you get out, it's only then that you do see security. The entire corridor leading to the penthouse suite is dotted with black suits bulging at all the wrong places. You're immediately stopped by a towering brute in an ill-fitting pinstripe, one meaty arm barring your way.

"Excuse me, but this is a private area for the meantime. Please leave immediately."

He wrinkles his nose as he smells the reek of whisky on you.

How do you react?

[]Show proper identification, state name and purpose.
[]Tear his arm off and beat him to death with it.
[]Light up a cigarette, puff the smoke in his face, and tell him that their idol boss needs to see you right away.

You're not in a very good mood.

Guy's annoying, but getting into fight with him now would mean you'll have to kill them all. They might still be useful for your mission.

Also - ask him why there are no guards at the entrance. WTF are these guys thinking? Early alert is crucial in dealing with intruders. At least when we are talking humans vs humans.

You look up at him, past the mirror-like surface of his obviously expensive shades, and manage to pin him with a glare that makes him stop in his tracks. Without breaking eye contact, you hand him a copy of Kyuubey's contract with the idol, Minase Iori - the document directly identifying you as her temporary personal bodyguard, your own smirking photo at the very top of the paper.

You give the armed gorilla the name that you remember, but just to play things safe, you add "Murderface" as an alias. At the same time, you nonchalantly stick two cigarettes between your lips and light them in the same sharp movement.

Despite the large No Smoking sign behind him, the guard looks over your papers carefully and nods, stepping slightly back. "Everything seems to be in order. My apologies, Miss Matsuda. As you can see, we're on high alert at the moment. We're taking the threat on Miss Minase's life very seriously."

Seriously, he says. A bum with a hard-on for idol pussy could have snuck in here.

[]Tell him about the lack of security in the lobby, and advise him politely on how it should be secured.
[]Push past him. You have an idol to visit and tie down to the bed, just so she doesn't get any bright ideas of sneaking away and getting herself killed. You don't talk to the help.

You take a moment to savor the freshly-lit cigarettes before replying around them, all while giving the head gorilla the usual look you give future gunshot victims. You tell him, in no uncertain terms, that if they were taking it seriously, then they'd have locked up the place tighter than a virgin idol's second input hole. The rest of the armed suits visibly bristle at this comment, as do the one you're talking to, but to his credit, he doesn't automatically break your jaw like you were expecting him to.

"That was what we thought about when we got here, but that kind of security attracts attention, and no doubt those after Miss Minase would be looking out for such a hotel. We thought it would be better to simply focus our efforts here, right at the only entrance to the penthouse. If they try anything, we'll be there to stop them." The guard nods. "And Miss Minase can count on us for that."

Idiots. Where do they get these types from?

There's really no way around it. You don't like doing this - well, you actually DO - but you don't relish it. Lives are at stake, after all, and if these idiots mess up, it's no doubt that they'll be the ones paying for it - as well as their boss.

You reach up slowly as the gorilla in front of you continues to drone on about their security contingencies - he seems to be caught up in his detailing of what they'd do in case anything happened that he misses you taking hold of his tie. You cinch your fingers around the silky velvet and tug back. He gives off a choked grunt, his face turning completely red, as he tips forward, off-balance, both hands flying out to steady himself.

You grab one arm and let him step past you as you shift aside. Twisting the man's meaty arm behind him and slamming him, face first, into the elevator doors behind you.

You plainly ignore the sound of twenty firearms having their safeties disengaged and aimed at you from behind as you calmly reiterate your request. You don't mean to disparage his team, of course, but you have to insist. Their boss hired you for a reason, after all, and you're simply here to do the job you're paid for. You enumerate the many ways you yourself could have infiltrated the building and the penthouse - and you don't skimp on the details on what you might have done with their bodies and Iori's if YOU were the one behind all this.

You let go of his arm and grab a fistful of his jacket instead, pulling him from his faceplant on the elevator doors and back onto his feet.

You pull a cigarette from your rapidly-dwindling box of smokes, stick it it between his lips, and light it with one of your own. Patting him on the head as you do so.

You force your lips into what you remember as a smile, and speak a few encouraging words at him, much for his and his team's benefit. You'd just humiliated their leader by manhandling him while being a skinny, frail-looking young girl - what's a couple more stabs to the ego?

He seems to be completely stunned at this, the lit cigarette barely hanging onto his lower lip, before you finally push past him and make your way to Iori's suite. Blatantly ignoring the stony glares from the gorillas lining the corridor.

You're not exactly confident with Iori's chances with them, but at least they could say that they tried. If anything, the full-building lockout should delay the worst case scenario.

You lift up your right arm - the one with the shield clamped tightly onto it - and you rap your knuckles smartly on the polished wood, introducing yourself plainly as the extra security sent in by the stupid freak cat. You wonder if Kyuubey actually had a name for his little agency. Maybe you'll ask Mami when you call her again, later.

Approximately ten seconds has passed since you knocked. You turn to one of the gorillas nearest you, and he merely shrugs. Sheer incompetence, you think, as you turn back to the door. Pressing your ear against it.

There's a faint noise coming from behind the door itself. A continued rustling, maybe the static of a TV, maybe something else. You can't tell.

Shit, is the suite already compromised? Is this another repeat of what happened in Mami's flat?

Taking a deep breath, you take hold of the elaborate brass door handle and give it a twist, before shoving it forward and bursting right into the room. Your hand straying to your shield, ready to slam it into position and have it dispense the firearm of the day, just in case it's needed NOW.

It's...well. The room is nice. Soft, warm. Costs a lot of money. Smells really nice, too. Like a faint hint of lavender and sandalwood. And fresh soap. The expensive kind.

After a few moments, it's only then that you realize that the smell is coming from the idol standing across the room from you, right at the entrance to the suite's bathroom, her entire form naked except for a towel. She seems like she'd just finished showering for the night. The noise you heard must've been running water.

"Guards," she calls out, probably to the gorillas outside. "Take this pungent little urchin out of my suite and out into the street. What kinds of guards are you, that you can't even stop the riffraff from coming into my very own room?!"

Yep. This was going to be a cakewalk, alright. God dammit, Kyuubey.

You hear the guards outside seemingly rushing forward in an attempt to be the first to get into the room and explain the situation to a half-naked sixteen year old idol - and you thwart that attempt by kicking the teak door shut with the heel of your boot, the heavy portal slamming closed with an ominous metal click.

You then take the moment of brief silence to introduce yourself to the principal. You're Chiaki Matsuda, one of QB's...security specialists. You try to avoid any instance of 'magical girls' in your introduction, as you remember that it's still a bit of a kayfabe term. You tell her about the security measures you've already taken and those you plan on undertaking. Most of this seems to go over the idol's head completely, but her expression seems to smoothen at the mention of your boss.

"Ah, so you're one of QB-san's agents? That changes things, then." She steps forward, bringing that intoxicating cloud of scent with her, and you see her looking you up and down. "You're shorter than I thought, but I suppose you look capable enough." She reaches forward and plucks your cigarettes from your lips with one hand, before taking your right hand with her other and stubbing the smokes out on your shield.

She steps back, hands gingerly letting yours go, and gestures towards the bathroom she just left. "Please. If not for your hygiene, then for my sake. Use the complimentary toiletries, don't touch any of mine."

. . .Unbelievable. You haven't been treated like this since...well, since six hours ago, by Sayaka nonetheless. You'd think you'd already gotten used to it, but it still sorta stings.

You respectfully decline the offer, stating your reasons curtly and clearly. You apologize for, as she said, "smelling like a bar", but your top priority here is her continued safety, not her comfort, and if she's offended about a little alcohol breath, then it was well out of your hands.

"...At the very least, brush your teeth," Iori insists, seemingly adamant to prove that she can order you around. "This is not about my comfort, this is about you taking care of yourself! Just how long have you been drinking today, anyway?!"

This was going to end up a screaming match, so you agree to it. At least you'll be able to do so with the door open - with the bathroom mirror and sink facing the door, you can easily get a cursory look at the room behind you while you brush. And it's not like you're going to take forever.

You grumble something about uppity idol bitches underneath your breath and step into the steamy, fragrant bathroom, Iori's freshly-bathed scent filling your nostrils. Unwrapping a complimentary toothbrush and slathering complimentary toothpaste onto the bristles, you rinse your mouth out first before starting the brushing process.

Behind you, reflected by the mirror, you see Iori drop her towel on the floor and get dressed for bed, in an outfit girls of her age should probably not be wearing.

You shrug. It's probably an idol thing, you say, as you continue brushing your teeth.

Yep. Easiest job in the whole world.

You hum tunelessly while you continue the delicate task of oral hygiene maintenance and idol voyeurism. After a moment, you decide to glance around the bathroom, which looks like it could easily fit your own apartment. Twice over.

As you look around, there doesn't seem to be any glaring security issues you could see. The vents seem to be securely grilled, the windows small and barred. The only thing you can note here is that Iori doesn't seem to be the neatest of people, with her used panties just lying there, a couple of feet away, on the marble floor. It's frilly, black and expensive.

You glance quickly back at Iori - she seems to be brushing her hair. All good so far.

What do you do?

OOC: I just thought up a new codename Chiaki can use: the "Cat-Lady".

Reasons:
1) Kyuubey looks like a cat, albeit a mutant one.
2) the Cat-Lady is an old, grimy spinster who lives alone in her old house with 50+ cats and lives on a diet of canned tuna and cake frosting. Every town has at least one.

You blink at glance at yourself in the mirror, before laughing slightly. Have you really sunk so low that you were actually considering it? No, no, of course not. You may have lost your own self-respect down the line, but it's back. It's back now, and you're going to be a complete and utter professional about this sort of thing. You're not selling your client's panties on the Internet.

Giving your mouth a final rinse, you finish brushing, and a cursory inspection reveals that you've done an alright job. Rinsing the brush, you place it down on the sink, and then you step out of the bathroom and back into the suite proper. You ignore Iori sitting primly in her nightgown in front of the dresser, brushing her hair out, and proceed with the canvassing.

There's obvious tension in the room between the both of you, but it's just you being generally annoyed at being sober in this time of the day. On Iori's part, however, you can't help but notice that she seems to be wanting to ask something, but can't find the way to ask it properly.

You leave it at this. You're not here to make the principal comfortable, like you said. You're here to make sure they don't end up on a porn site.

"This...this is about what happened to Yayoi-san, is it?" It's the first words you hear from the idol that doesn't sound like she's talking from high up on a goddamn throne. "They think it's going to happen to me too?"

You glare at the windows. Possible security risk, but they seem to have deadbolts, and they're bulletproof. They also keep the air conditioning in.

You're never really one for security detail. If you remember correctly, that's Sayaka's expertise - she may be a totally prickly bitch to you, but to her principals, they can't seem to praise her enough, especially when the principal in question is a little kid that needed protecting. You had asked QB about this, and he mentioned something about Sayaka trying to emulate Mami when dealing with clients. Something about being maternal, he had said, or being a big sister.

You're not Sayaka, you're not Mami. You are not in your element.

But as you hear Iori's confident voice tremble slightly now that the reality seems to have settled in with your presence, you can't help but understand them a little bit.

In any other event, you would have been brutally honest and not at all that optimistic about the chances of her surviving this, but instead you try your best to reassure her. Yes, her security and QB do think that there might be a risk, but it's a negligible one at best, and your presence is simply to make sure she was safe until she on the plane to America. She shouldn't think about getting raped - or being touched - by those otaku at all, because that will never happen on your watch.

You do this without looking at her, instead opening closets, looking underneath the massive bed, checking out the suite for any hidden passages, trapdoors or such. None so far.

The only other point of entry would be the skyroof, but it's too high up that it's a complete moot point.

As you look back at her, you see that it's worked, albeit slightly. She seems calmer than before, and is looking at you directly. At least she's not crying or anything.

"I...I see." Iori says after a moment. "I...suppose I shouldn't think about it too much. Everyone seems to be doing the worrying for me, so I won't let that go to waste. Thank you, Matsuda-san."

You try and distract yourself from just how dry your throat is - and how nice it would be to have some expensive whisky right about now - by continuing this conversation with the client. It'd be unprofessional, after all, if she saw you drinking on the job. She'd already had to try and get you to take a shower, you didn't need to damage your reputation further by stealing her panties or making an utter fool of yourself with alcohol.

You ask her about Yayoi. By the way she said her name, it seems as though they were pretty close. They were from the same studio after all, right?

She looks up at you from her seat in front of the dresser, before turning back to her reflection and nodding. "Y-yes, Yayoi-san, I...we're friends. We started out being idols together. Same line during the auditions, in fact." She seems to smile at the memory. "I was a bit more...irritable, back then. Yayoi-san, on the other hand, was nothing but energy and kindness. She came from a destitute background, but you wouldn't know it just by talking to her, or meeting her face to face. She loved everyone."

It's then that her smile falls, and she looks down. "When that happened to her, she...she changed, Matsuda-san. She's not the Yayoi I knew. I can't hold it against her, of course, this is not her fault at all. But she's..." Iori falters here, and you realize that you've made her cry. "...I can't even recognize my friend anymore. I hate it, Matsuda-san. I hate what they've done to her, and what they've made her become."

The sight of tears, you remember, once struck you hard enough that you yourself would easily be reduced to them. Not that you weren't already a crybaby back then, but seeing someone cry always had that effect on you.

Now, it's different. Markedly. But you do the thing expected of you anyway - you walk over to the lounge table just across the room, pick up the open box of tissues on top of it, and place it on the dresser table in front of the tearful idol. You don't do physical contact, but you're not someone to tell them that they can't cry because it's inconvenient.

"O-oh. Thank...thank you, Matsuda-san." Iori manages to say after a moment, sniffling. "I thought...I thought you were going to just stand there and watch the waterworks. See the idol bawl her eyes out and everything." She blows her nose, delicately, into a wad of tissues. "I wouldn't have held it against you. Idols are curiosities, after all."

You shake your head at this. You tell her that you've seen and heard more horrible things, and you know how the world can suddenly just turn on you like that, no questions asked, no quarter given. People change, and there's no helping it. We just move on the best we can.

Iori wipes at her eyes, before smiling. "...Matsuda-san, I...I apologize for being harsh on you, earlier. I think it's clear now that you really are focused on my safety. I thought you were just like the other guards posted outside. I had to fire three of them already for stealing my panties." She shakes her head. "You really can't find good help these days.

[]Panties. What...what perverts. It's a good thing you fired them, I would have. Out of a cannon.

Could it be that the Pervert-Rape-Squad actually already infiltrated the Security?
Never mind that we thought of stealing her panties, we're a girl after all, so thats on a COMPLETLY different level.

Anyway, no Pancakes for us, so at least we should get out something high-caliber and preferably automatic out of our shield, check its status and clean it if needed - we don't want the shit to jam when we need it - and then just sit down on the bed and wait.

Your argument is invalid.

It's not an overreaction for you to say something like that (and do it just as readily) but somehow, the deadpan way you said it seems to have made it sound all the funnier to the idol, and she bursts into relieved, tearful laughter immediately after. You're relieved too - at least the serious, heavy air between the both of you had been lifted somewhat, and you didn't really need a client who seemed more than eager to mope around feeling sorry for themselves while a firefight's going on. That said, your opinion of the idiots outside lowered to a couple more notches. It's not the panties, really, you think to yourself. It's how they could be so unprofessional as to do that AND get caught.

Embarrassing. A total embarrassment.

"H-haha! Ah...um...whew. That...that wasn't really funny at all, Matsuda-san," Iori manages after a moment, a tired smile on her face as she tries to get her breath back. "But how you said it...thank you. I...I needed that. More than I'm willing to admit."

You hold up a hand, shaking your head. It's not part of your responsibilities, you tell her, and was simply an observation. She sours slightly at that, but her mood seems to have massively improved, at least.

It's then that a knocking issues from the door, followed by the voice of the guard from earlier.

"Miss Matsuda? I apologize for the interruption, but Miss Minase has a visitor. It's important."

You blink at Iori, who shrugs, before moving to the door. You reply that there seems to be no company being expected that night, especially with the recent state of things.

"No, it's a...surprise visit of sorts. Yes." Gorilla's voice is distracted, as if he's listening to someone from another source. "Miss Minase, Miss Takatsuki Yayoi is here to see you."

Takatsuki Yayoi...? Wait, the girl who was raped before? What is she doing here?

"A-ah! Yayoi-san!" As if suddenly animated, Iori stands up from the dresser seat, checking her reflection slightly as she made a beeline to the door. "This...w-we talked about visiting each other one last time before I went to America, so...this probably may be the last time we'd ever be able to do it. Matsuda-san, please let her in."

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl. You wish you were something else, but them's the breaks.

It's nighttime. You're in the penthouse suite of a fancy upscale hotel, which is a real trade up from the dingy apartment you call a home. Normally, this would be cause for celebration, and at this time of night you'd either be dead drunk or well on your way being - but unfortunately, you're ass deep in a job you really weren't sure you wanted to take. So right now, you're sober. The most you've been in...well, as far as you can remember.

The assignment: security. The principal: a sixteen-year-old idol by the name of Minase Iori. She's been targeted by a group of hardcore otaku that seem to have a penchant for kidnapping and rape. It's already happened to her best friend, and it's your job to make sure it doesn't happen to her.

Your mood hasn't improved much, but at least you're being professional about it.

Right now, the guards outside had notified the both of you that Takatsuki Yayoi, one of the otaku group's previous victims and the principal's best friend, is currently outside the penthouse suite, awaiting entry. She's not exactly expected, but Iori says that they've talked about her visiting.

You're understandably paranoid, and you're not exactly eager to let anyone in, including the guards outside. But the Principal seems to be adamant that it's perfectly all right.

"Please, Matsuda-san. Yayoi, even in her state right now...she's of no threat to anyone. I should be insulted by you thinking that one of my best friends should be worthy of suspicion, but..." Iori shakes her head. "Yayoi couldn't hurt a fly then, what more now? She flinches whenever someone comes close to her, she jumps at shadows. She is even averse to hugs, when she gave them freely the last I remember her."

Iori places a hand on your shield. "Please, Matsuda-san. Don't think ill of my friend. She has suffered enough."

How do you respond?

If we don't let her get this one she'll become stubborn and overly disobedient which could make our job harder.

We will first survey the scene outside the door, then scan Yayoi for magic. Then put Iori as far away from the door as possible, and let Yayoi, and only Yayoi, in. The visit shall be limited to ten minutes before we politely but firmly get her to leave.

It seems like we have some confused ideas about this bodyguard thing. It's not really sustainable to enforce hermitage on the client.

A bodyguard should give advice to their client on security, and a smart client should listen to the person they're paying to think about their safety, but "don't ever let your friends into your house" isn't good or reasonable advice.

You glance down at the dainty, perfectly-manicured hand gracing the scarred surface of your shield - and then back up at Iori's face, her expression pleading. Maybe if you were just a little bit sauced, you could have dealt with this much more easily. You're not, though, and your harsh denial for her appeal gets stuck in your throat.

It's her rape victim of a friend. Maybe you're laying the professional bodyguard thing a bit too heavy-like. They're about to say goodbye to each other before the other has to leave for another continent.

She has someone she cares about. She may be a vapid, hypersexualized pop icon that exemplifies everything that is wrong with today's society, but she wants to see her broken friend one last time.

You swallow painfully, before shrugging her hand off your shield. You direct her to move well away from the door, to stay behind you, while you check out the situation outside the door. You'll let her unexpected visitor in, but she shouldn't expect too much.

"...Thank you, Matsuda-san. This means a lot to me."

We let the client's friend in, that's for sure.
The question is, how we go about doing it.

Anyway check you Soul Gem - just in case - it should glow if Witch (or someone given Witch Kiss) is nearby. That's pretty much the only thing we have to worry about, since you are well capable to beat any other opponent to pulp just with your bare hands. If it's a Witch, well... you'd have to actually use gun.

You ignore her heartfelt thanks as you move forward, closing your hand over the door's handle. The door, for all its ornate design, doesn't have a peephole, and you're forced to peer around the door itself as you pull it open the smallest crack.

The situation outside seems to be normal. The guards are still standing guard, and the gorilla you'd roughed up earlier is standing directly in front of the door, with what you assume is Yayoi standing next to him, being completely dwarfed by his frame. She's...got a haunted look to her, which is sad as you can see that she was once one of the more popular idols. Her hair, dark auburn and tied into curly pigtails, seem somewhat flat and disheveled, and her clothes are dark-colored and loose - a far cry from the usually form-fitting and colorful clothes an idol usually wears.

A shadow of her former self. You're quite familiar with that sort of thing.

You're satisfied with what you see, and you increase the gap between the door and the door jamb just a bit more, enough for your hand to slip through - and for both Yayoi and the Guard to get a good look at you. Yayoi seems to be almost alarmed at the sight of your glowering stare, and shrinks back slightly. The guard simply scowls.

You point at Yayoi, and wave her closer. The former idol glances up at the guard, seemingly uncertain, before looking back at you and gingerly stepping forward. You click your tongue impatiently and reach forward just a bit more - and Yayoi seems to whimper as you grab her by the wrist.

She feels frail underneath her bulky, loose jacket. It was as if you could easily crush her wrist in your grasp by increasing pressure the slightest, smallest bit.

Yayoi shivers in your grasp, an expression of tearful hurt on her face, but you ignore this, merely glaring at the guard who seems all too ready to protest.

"Don't--"

You tell him to shut up and stay back, before roughly pulling Yayoi into the room just as you throw the door open. You tug her hard enough to cause her to stumble, a feeble cry of surprise and alarm issuing from her lips. In the same movement, you slam the door close with your other hand, while still keeping hold on Yayoi's wrist. You immediately slap the locks back in place, and shove the deadbolt secure.

"M-Matsuda-san! Please! You're hurting Yayoi!" Iori protests, clearly alarmed at this kind of treatment. You ignore this too. You've already conceded this to her - you're not about to compromise now.

Still keeping a grip on Yayoi's hand, you pat her down with your other. The girl's eyes clearly wide, staring and tearful as you pat her down for weapons. You get to her lower body, completely focused on finding hidden weapons - causing you to completely miss Iori's hand slapping you hard across the cheek.

The slap isn't that strong, but it stuns you long enough that you step back, your eyes wide behind your own glasses.

"MATSUDA-SAN! PLEASE! WHAT DO YOU THINK YOU'RE DOING?!" Iori screeches at you, pulling a positively-crying Yayoi into her arms, shielding her from you. "Weren't you listening a while ago?! I thought we agreed on--!!"

"D-don't you think I know that you're doing this for my safety?! I'm just as scared as anyone else! But you didn't need to manhandle her like some piece of meat, Matsuda-san!" Iori snaps at you over Yayoi's feeble sobs. "I thought...I thought you'd be different than those idiots outside! I suppose I was wrong after all - you're the same, and all you're probably thinking about is the paycheck you get after this, aren't you?!"

You stay silent, not really having a reply to this tirade. Shaking your head, you merely cross your arms. A drink would be good right about now...

Iori glares at you for a few more moments, before focusing her entire attention towards Yayoi, trying to comfort the girl, whispering directly into her ear. She leads the tearful former idol to the bed, making her sit down, and carefully wipes her tears away with her own fingers. It'd almost look romantic, if it weren't for the fact that you caused it.

You stand there for a while, slightly unsure of what you're actually doing there, before shaking your head and making for one of the chairs placed across the room. Might as well start that bedside watch--

"Get out of my room, Matsuda-san."

Iori's voice is chilly, imperious, the same as your first meeting. "You've checked my room for security gaps, right? If you've found none, then get out. You may stand guard outside, just like the rest of the hired help."

She's standing in front of you, now, and it looks like she's not going to take no for an answer.

God DAMMIT, Kyuubey.

How do you defuse this situation?

"Sorry about that. This is not the kind of job that I usually do. You are right that I'm more used to dealing with that sort of guys" pointing at the door "than with actual people with normal feelings, so I might lack some subtlety. But it wasn't always that way, even through all the stuff that came with the odd jobs, I remember that much... and seeing you two here now reminds me of that. The way you care for your friend is... admirable. I'm sorry that I have to be the mean one here, but it's for the best."

Give her couple seconds to process that.

"You...you just don't get it, do you?" Iori is still enraged, but she seems to be getting a handle on her temper. "Yes, you've made it abundantly clear that you're here for MY SAFETY, and that if I wanted someone to make me feel like a human being even under such circumstances, I should look elsewhere. I realize, right now, what you truly mean by that." Her words dripping with indignation and venom, she turns her back on you, as if loathe to even recognize your existence by looking at you while the both of you talked.

"You may earn your paycheck until tomorrow morning, Matsuda-san, but I'd better not see hide or hair of you when I wake up. I will contact Kyuubey then and have him send me another agent. Someone who hasn't forgotten how to be a decent human being." She points towards a single desolate chair at the far corner of the room. "You may do your guarding there. Far away from Yayoi, and far away from me. She'll be staying over until tomorrow morning, so it'll be better if she doesn't see you looming over us while we slept."

This just gets better and better, doesn't it? At least you're not going to leave.

You may have apologized for earlier, but you're not about to make any more concessions. You tell her - or rather, the back of her head - that sitting from across the suite isn't really optimal to what you were paid to do. A bedside watch is what is going to happen. Both of them would simply have to just ignore your presence.

". . .I hate you, Matsuda-san. No, I think I've gone past that." She murmurs, turning slightly to look at you from the corner of her eye. "I pity you. You've allowed yourself to get to this state that you don't even fully comprehend why I'm angry at you, and why I need to be as far away from you as possible." She looks away, crossing her arms. "Now I don't know who to be more frightened of - the otaku trying to kidnap and rape me, or the girl I'm paying to protect me."

She lets out a sigh, and shakes her head. "If you're going to sit beside the bed, sit on the side where I'll be sleeping. I don't want you anywhere near Yayoi."

She stalks off, quietly fuming, leaving you there to...well, you're not sure. Probably feel stupid, since that's what you've been doing.

You glance at them, and they seem to be getting ready for bed, chatting with hushed voices. You turn towards the door leading out of the suite.

[]Ask one of the gorillas outside for a transceiver tuned to their frequency, so you could get updates on their patrols.
[]Wait for them to fall asleep, and then move to bedside watch position.

You leave the girls alone and make for the door, slowly and carefully undoing each lock so as not to make too much noise while Iori and Yayoi are talking. You pull the door open a few inches, and you call out for one of the guards. He seems to smirk at you, but he quickly smartens up at seeing your trademark glare. You ask for a transceiver, or something to help you hear the details about their patrols - and he hands you a foldable headset, withdrawn from his own coat pocket. It seems to be his.

You don't thank him as you snatch it out of his grasp, and slam the door shut before he could react. You swiftly engage the locks again, studiously ignoring the glare Iori's shooting at you.

You're not exactly doing things right, but you're doing them how you've always done it. So it works out somewhat. Maybe. You don't know.

You unfold the headset and slip it on, the single earbud sitting comfortably in your ear. You turn it on with a tap, and immediately you hear the clipped chatter of the guards as they make their patrols. Nothing of note, but you do hear them grumble about some whisky-reeking little cunt ordering them around.

You smile slightly at this, glancing back towards the two girls. They're already in bed, buried underneath the covers, and they seem to be...

Well. The painting in the completely opposite direction is suddenly interesting.

[]Look away. This isn't a peep show.

You give the two girls the privacy they need - at least, as much of it as you can give them, what with still being in the same room and being in plain sight and all. Long ago, you probably would've been flustered at the sight of them, but now it's not really embarrassment over what they're doing but more of being there while they're doing it.

You lean against the wall next to the door, studiously keeping your eyes away from them, and wait for them to...finish, so to speak. You fiddle with your phone while doing so. Tempting as it is to call Mami, doing so may ruin the current mood.

It takes them the best part of an hour before you see that they've finally fallen asleep in each other's arms, huddled close together. Iori being the big spoon, Yayoi being the small one.

You're...you're a bit jelly, but you have a job to do.

You quietly make your way towards the bed, and take your seat at Iori's side. Careful not to make any sudden moves that could make a noise and disturb them.

Rape can push some people into relationships or homosexuality
It is largely because of trust. She knows Iori won't hurt her and she is female so to Yayoi it could be comforting to have that
A girl I grew up with was actually raped and she still can't stand to have any men touch her whatsoever not a pat on the shoulder or anything not even her from father and brother
She is a lesbian now because the only person she could stand being close to her was another friend she grew up with

Sounds like bullshit when I type it out really but it is the honest truth

This is bad. You've been moving about ever since you woke up today, and you haven't really slept a wink since then. You're starting to feel the fatigue slowly seep in, your body somewhat giving in to this unusual level of comfort. Compared to your futon, you're sitting in a chair made out of goddamn clouds.

Shaking your head, you try as focus as much as you can. You pull out your cellphone and start to type out a message to Mami. Talking to her should perk you up some, even if it's just through text.

What message do you send Mami?

There's only so much room allowed in a single text message, so you break it up into parts that hopefully Mami won't mind reading. You ask her first if she's alright, then segue into what you're doing at the moment - that is, guard duty. You ask her what to do in your current situation with Iori, and what you can to try and fix things. You end the series of messages with an apology of how late it is.

Your phone beeps quietly as it notifies you that you've successfully sent the messages through, and you stuff it back into your inventory.

Now, the hard part. You need to get to the refrigerator and the caffeine it contains. You've decided to...use what you have in a somewhat creative manner. You don't like doing this at all, stopping time itself for things like this - but this could end up being a matter of life and death.

You stand up, somewhat unsteadily from the chair, and slowly - carefully - turn the shield clockwise, thirty degrees. Careful not to let the gears grind too much, or the locks slap into place too loudly.

The world turns gray. Time stopping all around you, freezing everything into stasis.

What do you do?

The appearance of the smiling girl with the pink hair and dark eyes doesn't exactly surprise you, but it doesn't comfort you either. The entire world rippling in its dull cast-iron shade, you glance back at the bed, where your Principal and her friend lay sleeping.

...She's still there, still asleep, frozen in time but safe. Everything's alright, except for this sudden reunion.

You turn back towards the apparition, who is still standing there, quietly, smiling at you like an idiot. You make to cancel the time stop - your left hand closing over the rim of your shield - but it's then that she slowly waves at you, as if trying to make you come closer.

You're not crazy, of course.

You pull your shield back to its original position, and time resumes its normal flow. The phantasm disappears along with the time stop, as if it never were.

Christ. You don't really need this, do you?

You sink back into the comfortable grasp of the miraculous lazyboy chair, letting yourself get enveloped once more in its cozy embrace. The sleep's been driven out of your body by that little encounter, but it doesn't change the fact that your body's nearing its limits. You'll probably last for a few more hours, at best.

As you mull over the appearance of the pink-haired bitch, you hear the soft beep notifying you of a message received.

It must be Mami's reply, you think as you make to pull your phone out of your inventory. Flipping the clamshell device open, you squint at your phone's screen.

It's not Mami's reply. The number is the same one as the sender of that message where you were told to move on, to get on with your life.

It reads:

"Wake up."

It has been reported that some victims of rape, during the act, would retreat into a fantasy world from which they could not wake up. In this catatonic state, the victim lived in a world just like their normal one, except they weren't being raped. The only way that they realized they needed to wake up was a note they found in their fantasy world. It would tell them about their condition, and tell them to wake up. Even then, it would often take months until they were ready to discard their fantasy world and please wake up.

So anyone find it suspicious that the Principal and the rape-victim were having sex?
First she tells us that she has a great aversion to being touched, has trouble trusting people, etc and then they immediately start fucking. That's not right.
She said that she hadn't even talked to her after the incident, so I find it hard to believe they managed to work it out in meantime and have the rap-victim be comfortable with intimacy, even with her best friend.

Alright, you're not really digging the cryptic messages sent in a vaguely passive-aggressive ex-girlfriend/boyfriend/life partner way, so you call the sender back. You hold the device up to your ear, and immediately you hear ringing.

One, twice, three times, and then it picks up.

What you hear is...not what you expected. You hear someone, female, screaming for help. You hear laughing, high-pitched, shrill, each gasp of hilarity interlaced with unintelligible syllables. You hear gunshots in the background - lots of it, high caliber.

A few moments, and the line goes dead.

". . ." Well. That was strange.

But not as strange as Takatsuki Yayoi, standing in front of you, wearing nothing but her birthday suit. Her eyes half-lidded, glazed over.

She murmurs Iori's name, and all too suddenly, clambers onto your lap. Straddling your stocking-clad hips, pressing her body against yours.

You're...not exactly sure how to deal with this right now.

I'm biased as a judge of quality, but in SuWQ, they've yet to actually use the Substrikers for more than a few moments before getting fucked up hard by Martians. They're currently on their way to Brisbane after escaping, fending off Martian attacks on the flotilla that rescued them.

As for TWQ, I don't read it, but it's currently in a crossover with SWQ, iirc. The PC in TWQ is Ian's mom, a vet of WWI. In SWQ, the PC recently rescued the TWQ unit or something.

Having shields that can regenerate unlike armor of a tank? Being able to traverse all terrain like a tank and being able to go up and down slopes better, or god forbid urban terrain? They also carry the same armament as the tank their striker is a model of. You also need a fraction of the money to make a stiker then you do to make a 40 ton tank

For one, the treads are part of the Tank Striker, and that's where the magical focus is located. It's also what allows the Tank Witch to reach speeds impossible for a tank of the time period.
Putting a Tank Witch on a jeep wouldn't improve her mobility at all, and only presents a bigger target.

As for being replaced by a tank or anti-tank infantry, the Tank Witch has better mobility, speed, and regenerating shields that a tank does not. She also has heavier weapons, greater speed (unless the anti-tank infantry is mounted), greater mobility (because she's still more maneuverable than any other vehicle that the infantry could be mounted on), has a magical forcefield, and carries a bigger weapon.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 06/25/12(Mon)07:09 No.19618989

You have been volunteered by Kyuubey to work as personal security detail to popular idol Minase Iori, who is currently staying in the penthouse of the fanciest Hotel in the city. After a small altercation with the idol's existing security detail and an unexpected visit from her damaged goods of a best friend, you're now trying to stay awake in order to do what you're being paid to do. A string of some rather peculiar events have certainly made sleep a far-off worry, however.

One of these events being that mysterious message from an unknown number, asking you to wake up.

Another being the aforementioned former idol, smelling faintly of the activities she'd been doing with your client and wearing nothing but the hair on her head, is currently straddling your lap while you sit in the most comfortable chair in the world.

Another, still, is the girl from your dreams that you killed, haunting the one place no one can follow you into.

Your principal is safe on her bed and sleeping deeply, but you've got the nagging feeling that you're missing something.

What do you do?

The former idol's half-asleep proposition - and considering it one is stretching it a bit too far already, at least to you - while sweet, is not proper at the moment. Besides, it never paid to get involved with clients or the girlfriend of clients, and you're not about to start THAT habit now. No, you'll stick to the painkillers and alcohol. Those vices, at least you can handle.

You make to rise from the chair, to lift her off of you and bring her back to Iori's side, where she belongs - when suddenly you realize that you are physically unable to. Your arms, your legs, your entire body seems to have been frozen stiff, your muscles filled with lead, your veins pumping coagulated ice. Even the smallest movement involving your neck seems to take all your strength, and your eyes widen at this rather surprising development.

It's then that Yayoi, still on your lap, starts to giggle. Giggling in a way you've already heard before, in that call you made to that strange number earlier. The shrill laughing that was punctuated with gunshots.

"As expected of a magical girl," Yayoi whispers into your ear. "I was wondering how long before you found out, Matsuda-san. It's almost commendable how quickly you did. I thought I was going to be disappointed" She reaches up with a hand, tracing a line down your cheek.

"You might as well stop trying to get up. By the moment you wake up, they'll be finished with Iori." Yayoi smiles. "Oh, they won't touch you, I made them promise. Call it a courtesy being extended from one professional to another."

How do you react?

Thats the tricky bit, kind hard to do anything if we are paralyzed.

As far as I remember, the shield needs to turn in order to work, but physical application (hands) Im not so sure. Any Madokafags here to elaborate?

As for the paralysis, anything physical is useless, this is dreamworld. Best thing we can do is mental strenght, meditate into it or something.
If that fails, we can always use rage. Lot's and lot's of pure noir RAGE.

So much for being prepared. So much for being thorough. So much for actually hoping that things would go right this time, that things would finally go your way after so many times of it being the complete and utterly crushing contrary. You thought that this would be different than your previous assignments, but life is rarely so kind.

Of course, you find this funny, somehow. It's hilarious, the way you were so endearingly optimistic.

You manage a smile, a feeble laugh, and Yayoi blinks at this, seemingly taken aback by this. She blinks again as your laugh becomes just a little bit louder, despite how vulnerable you are right now, despite how even breathing took so much effort, so much focus.

You are still laughing as the gears in your shield crunch together, the device turning itself a complete 180 degrees, hard enough that the impact claws sparks into the air.

The pink-haired girl, once more, manifests into view. Now beside you, both gloved hands on her slim waist, looking down at you with her midnight black eyes and an expression that could be considered as amusement.

"Well, I'm glad you find everything funny, Homura-chan." The girl says after a moment. "You always had a weird sense of humor, even when you're just about to die."

She doesn't seem to be going for the kill, strangely enough. And you still can't move, despite the time stop.

You do your level best to ignore the sweet, cloying scent of the pink-haired girl from your nightmares as you close your eyes and try to concentrate. You've never been one to ask help from anyone - not even when the rapidly-approaching alternative was making peace with whatever god was there and hoping your remains don't make that much of a bloody mess. No, you try not to rely on others.

For a moment, you try to will yourself awake. Forcing everything you've got into it. Your anger. Your dissatisfaction. Surely you've got lots of that, somewhere. Your want to simply...well, simply be happy again, even if you know full well you don't deserve it. Your hatred of mimes and the little bastards that insist to use the words 'utilize' instead of use.

In your mind, you try to fan a single ember into a flame - but you fail utterly as you realize that this could be your way out. Of course you'll be sorry about Iori, but...hey, at least you tried, right?

You open your eyes, and look towards the magical girl with the dead eyes.

You murmur the two words that you've never said to anyone else except a certain blonde girl with the exceedingly large endowments.

She hears them, and her smile widens.

"Ah, ah...this is strange. This is new. Homura-chan, asking for MY help? After all we've done together, after you shot me here--" she touches the center of her forehead with a finger. "--and killed me even before I'd barely started?"

She raises her left hand, and a replica of your shield - sans the gash on the center gem, of course - manifests in a purple flash of light onto her forearm. All three orbs trailing black smoke. "Well, just for once, I can switch sides. I can help the protagonist a few times, since this predicament you've clumsily stumbled into rather spoils the ending a bit, if you die here." The shield clacks into position, and she draws a golden Desert Eagle from it. "I'll help you, Homura-chan, and in the way you'd appreciate more. And don't worry - consider this a freebie. You won't owe me anything."

It's then that she places the barrel mouth of the oversized handcannon against your temple.

"I assure you that this is in no way foreshadowing or being symbolic or anything," She giggles. "But it's certainly cute. Any last words?"

What do you say before she wakes you up?

You spit out the invective before gritting your teeth and closing your eyes. Too many times you've found yourself in the exact same situation, most of those times the hand holding the gun your own. It's not that you're afraid of the pain, or scared of what waited for you afterwards. Hell, if Pinky here had given you the gun and you could move enough to pull the trigger, you'd have done it.

All you're bracing for, really, is waking up and finding out that you've failed someone who willingly put their life in your hands once again.

A heavy metallic click. A blinding explosion. A crunching pain blossoming in from the side of your head for a split second before being numbed by something cold that slowly spreads throughout your entire body.

The last thing you think of before you die, funnily enough, is the word 'Pancakes'.

Sometimes you surprise even yourself.

You wake up to the sound of Iori screaming your name. Again and again and again, her voice already hoarse from panic and fear and desperation. She is screaming your name, pleading for you to wake up, right before the gloved hand of the heavyset man in dark military fatigues on top of her gags her with a pair of her own panties.

You wake up with everything hurting. You're on the floor, sprawled on your stomach. Beside you is Yayoi, on all fours, busy throwing up what looks to be blood in between foul language that you're sure the real Yayoi probably wouldn't utter in her own lifetime. You're sure of this because the girl in the black sweater isn't Yayoi at all, but a magical girl with brilliant green hair and crimson eyes.

There are four other men besides the one on top of Iori, and they seem to be wearing some very serious gear. Flak jackets, grenades, AK-47s, everything. You move slightly and see that the circular skylight has been shattered from the outside, rappelling rope trailing down from it.

A video camera, set on a tripod, is beside the bed, aimed at the pair.

They seem to have not realized that you've waken up.

What do you do?

Grin like a madman, I do believe we get to have some fun here.

Time stop, pump a few magazines of ammo into the magical girl, confirm the kill as much as possible. We might be able to take her without the time stop but she might hit us with something or use a large magical attack that endangers the Principal.

Then we have to decide if we're going to have fun with the soldiers or not, I like the idea of crippling them, unarming them and letting them feel all the pain Iori and Yayoi did before we finish them, but I think Iori would be rather freaked out by us torturing people in front of her so we would have to do it outside which we can not do, therefore we have to make it quick. We probably don't need time stop for these chumps after the Magical Girl is dead, but if we can keep it going easily than just double tap them all in the head, if not then turn it off after killing the Magical Girl and then slaughter them efficiently.

That would be true under the assumption that hammerspace is considered to be effectively outside of any conventional measurement. But since this hasn't been done before, it is also possible that the shield itself, or ourself, would count as the location of the soul gem as magic isn't bound completely by physical laws. "Hey, Midori, are you okay over there?" The man right on top of Iori, nearly covering the skinny idol in his bulk and girth, casts the still-vomiting Magical Girl a concerned look through his mask.

"I'll...I'll be fine," The green-haired girl manages to choke out. "J-just...kinda overworked I guess," she adds after wiping her mouth with a sleeve. "W-what was that? Girl with pink hair and...black eyes? How'd she get into my illusion?"

"Well, er, if you're okay, can you stop getting sick in here? It's kind of ruining the mood, here." The otaku complains weedily, prompting his armed companions to snigger and laugh. "I mean, can't you do it outside or something--"

His sentence dies in his throat - as do all other noise inside the room - as you stagger slightly unsteadily back to your feet. Your shield is clicking, clicking fast, clicking erratically, its two remaining gems burning crimson. You must have been smiling rather terribly as you see both the magical girl and Iori look upon you in horror as you spread both your arms to the side - each hand gripping a fully-loaded Ingram Mac 10, fingers already carressing the triggers.

You don't need time stop with what you're about to do. The otakus seem to be frozen in place, completely in shock, and you hear one of them whimper, a puddle of yellow forming underneath one of his booted feet.

Everyone in this room - barring you, barring your principal, and barring the magical girl who gave you enough professional courtesy not to have you raped - is going to die.

Stopping time is your gimmick. It's your neat little trick, being a Magical girl. It's the same with being able to, say, pull an unlimited number of swords out of your cape. Or doing the same with gigantic spears that break apart into multi-sectioned staves. Or having a D-cup when you've barely seventeen.

You wish you could have stopped time right now. Not because you wanted to have that edge over these bastards who thought raping idols at the peak of their careers were good fun. Not because you thought they had a chance, even when you're grossly outnumbered and have a magical girl working against you.

No, you wished you could stop time so you could savor this moment for as long as you want.

It's when they snap themselves into desperate action that you start murdering them. Your fingers strumming the triggers, letting off precise bursts in tight, impeccable groupings. The first one, from across the room, dies with his face reduced to hamburger, painting the window behind him a lumpy crimson. He falls backward, his feet kicking out at the camera tripod, making it wobble and lean back against the wall, the recording not simply focusing on the bed itself.

The second one dies with half his face shorn away as you give him a prolonged burst from both guns, each one kicking futilely in your iron grip, their stream of death tight and confined as they send him crashing through one of the plate-glass windows - not shattering it, but merely knocking the pane out of its frame through the sheer weight of his slack corpse and the amount of hardware piled on it. He doesn't scream on the way down - but the third does.

The fourth, you're not even looking at as you kill him, a snapshot that buries a .45 round into his skull and making a rather grotesque exit wound flower at the back of his head. He drops to the floor like a sack of limp things you usually put in a sack and throw into a lake.

You save the would-be rapist for last. It's then that you recognize him as the guard you manhandled earlier.

What do you do?

The Golden Desert Eagle makes you stop and wonder for a moment, before you look down at yourself, in case you find yourself in another body. Nope, you seem to be in the same one you've always remembered yourself being. At the very least you still really need a drink.

Later. You'll have a drink later. Right now, there's work to do.

Tossing the other Ingram to a far corner of the room - it was nearly empty anyway - you step forward, advancing on the still-screaming, green-haired magical girl. She shrinks at your approach, babbling almost incoherently, her crimson eyes mere dots that focus on you, then on the gun in your hand, and back at you again. Clearly hysterical, clearly traumatized at seeing someone reduce five living, breathing human beings into nothing but meat in the span of ten seconds.

Strange. She seemed just being in the same room where a brutal rape was about to take place.

You thank her for her professionalism by shooting her kneecaps out. Two angry, blinding reports from the gaudy handcannon, and her legs are reduced to bloody stumps at the knee. She screams harder and louder than she ever did since the debacle started, before passing out promptly.

You tug the rappelling rope from the skylight and use it to truss the now-disabled Magical Girl up, making sure she's gagged. Her soul gem, a red one affixed to her choker, is safely deposited in your inventory.

Iori is still screaming, looking at everything in pure horror, tears in her eyes. She is literally naked, and a corpse is on top of her. The corpse you could deal with easily enough, but what about her?

How do you handle this situation?

Poor girl. She never deserved any of this. For the briefest moment, you consider putting her out of her misery - no doubt something like this will haunt her for the rest of her life, more than having her best friend raped. No one needs to carry a burden like that. Not even you, but it's not as if you had any choice on the matter.

Shaking your head, surprised at yourself, you immediately move to help the idol. You pull the corpse off of her - grunting slightly in satisfaction as you take heart in such a clean shot - and deposit him neatly out the window, no doubt giving a street cleaner below a bad start to his day. Thankfully Iori doesn't seem to notice this, as she seems to have curled into a fetal position, crying hard into a blood-flecked pillow, her sobs muffled by the gag tied crudely at the back of her head.

Life isn't so kind. It really isn't.

Letting the girl sob into your costume's front as you slowly and carefully untie her. Wiping the flecks of blood and gore away from her with your sleeves, or the edge of the covers, whatever you can get your hands on at the moment. All the while apologizing to her, your voice barely below a whisper.

You're sorry, you say. You're sorry for not being there where it counted the most. You're sorry for being a failure as a bodyguard.

Seemingly angered at this, she beats her small fists at your chest, each blow weak and feeble, her crying seemingly draining her of strength - before she curls her fingers into your shoulders, clinging into you, holding you close. As if she never wanted to let go.

You let her cry as much as she want as you draw your cellphone out of your inventory. Speed-dialing Mami's number. You glance at the gold-plated Desert Eagle you've placed on the bed beside you, and you shake your head as your phone rings.

"Yes, Tomoe Mami here. Chiaki-san, what can I do for you today?"

You tell her what has happened quickly, glossing over the less important details. Mami is quiet throughout the entire thing, and only speaks up after you say that you're done.

"I'll get over there as soon as I can. Ten minutes at the most. Don't let her out of your sight, Chiaki-san, whatever you do. Shock and Trauma can do a lot to people."

You thank for her advice, tell her to hurry, and end the call.

You look down at Iori, then at the bathroom, and then back to her again. After a moment, you clear your throat quietly and then gently ask her if she wants you to help her get cleaned up in the shower.

She seems to whimper at the suggestion, but after a while she nods weakly, still clinging to your shoulders. Still burying her face into your chest, curled up against you.

You inwardly think that ten minutes seems such a long time, but nevertheless, you did ask. You slip an arm under her knees, the other supporting her back, and you carry her slowly and carefully to the bathroom - nudging Midori's unconscious form away from your path as you do so.

You step into the spacious bathroom, kicking off your heels at the treshold - you don't exactly want to slip on a damp tile and injure yourselves. Now treading on stockings, you have a bit more traction as you get her to the suite's extravagant shower, and you gently let her down on her feet right underneath the showerhead itself.

What a sight both of you must make. A grimy magical girl and her bloody, shellshocked client.

You turn the shower on after a moment's confusion, adjust the temperature to a lukewarm level, and let the stream of water wash the blood and gore off of Iori. The runoff splashes at you, drenching your costume, but it's not like you care.

She weakly murmurs something about soap and washing her hair out, and you seem to all but jump to comply - looking about for anything that might resemble soap and shampoo in the rather extravagantly-stocked shower. You find two brands you're familiar with, and you decide to go with the shampoo first. Turning off the water, you squeeze a moderate amount onto your hand, work it into a thick lather with both hands, and then massage the suds into her scalp. Knowing the idol, there's probably some sort of ritual to her showers, but you're doing it the way you do it to yourself at the moment. She can't complain, anyway.

After that, the soaping. This...could get a bit dicey, here. You've never soaped up anyone else before, certainly not someone who almost got brutally taken advantage of. You lather the soap in your hands as Iori somewhat looks at you, expectantly.

We aren't Pink Mohawk, our priority is getting the job done, we're Black Trenchcoat which means we are professional, get the job done, and if shit goes down we go to plan B which is pretty much a Pink Mohawk plan A with some more preparation. A Black Trenchcoat needs to have a professional name, Murderface isn't professional, we only breakout the name Murderface when it is really needed.

Or we just put it as a middle name or nickname, Chiaki "Murderface" Matsuda.

You stop working up a lather with your hands and ask Iori quietly if she wanted you to do the washing up for her. A ghost of a smile curls her lips, and she nods slightly, before turning her back to you. Gathering her now-soaked hair with both hands and pulling it over her shoulder, so that you could wash her back without worrying about accidentally soaping her hair.

You take this as a good sign, and start soaping her back. Really careful-like. Slow, but not slow enough that it looks like you're taking advantage of the situation. Not fast enough to look lazy, either - you're trying to wash off blood and gore stains.

One thing's for sure, they certainly don't make idols the way the used to. Iori certainly has her rough edges, but you could see why otaku would want to go for her and her ilk.

"...Thank you, Chiaki-san." Iori murmurs, suddenly out of the blue.

You pause for a moment, before shaking your head. She didn't need to thank someone on her own payroll. And she was going to fire you the next day, anyway.

"N-no, you saved me...I...I'm grateful for that. I really am." Iori's voice echoes around the spacious bathroom. "But...but how did you manage to kill them so quickly...? Is this how QB trains his agents? Are all of them like that?"

You think about Iori's question in silence as you continue to wash her. You're no longer as hesitant or as flustered about this activity as you were earlier, but you're still being careful.

You finally reply with a half-truth. QB takes girls of your age or younger, those who have nothing much else to live for, and gives them another chance to use what they have that would benefit other people. It's a bit more complicated than that, of course, but you do say that you are very well-trained, and everyone in QB's payroll has a role they must fulfill. Yours is just...well, you're the brute squad, to be completely honest.

You don't sound all that convincing, but she seems to buy it, turning around to face you. And your hands, which were busy washing the spots near her shoulderblades, end up...

"Still, Chiaki-san. I...I thank you. I shouldn't be saying that right now. You saved me, and I don't think I'd have survived that."

You open your mouth to reply but there's a cough near the doorway to the bathroom, and you see Mami in her costume, looking away politely, a gloved hand to her chest.

You hastily step back to cease this particular scene, and Mami takes over quickly, radiating that air of confidence and assurance and maternal concern that you immediately feel unworthy of her presence. Iori seems puzzled at this, glancing at you and then at the approaching Mami, before you tell her that she's here to take care of Iori and what happened.

"Yes. I'll be taking over from here. Chiaki-san no doubt needs her own rest." Mami says politely, and you nudge the naked idol towards the blonde. "Chiaki-san, please get back to headquarters for your debriefing. Kyuubey is waiting for your complete report."

Iori seems to be concerned, but you smile weakly at her and wave her goodbye. It's been fun. No, well, it wasn't. But it was certainly entertaining.

You remind Mami of the unconscious magical girl outside, and that you want to interrogate her after your debriefing.

"Of course, Chiaki-san. I'll make sure to get her comfortable in the Silent Room before your debriefing wraps up. You can interrogate her there, if you like. I'll go finish washing Minase-san up. You missed a few spots."

"Chiaki-san?" Iori asks, suddenly fearful. "Are you leaving...? Right now?"

Well. Dammit. What are we going to do now?

You blink at Iori's question through your glasses. Well, you were planning on leaving right now, but you'll probably stop by over at Charles' for a drink. Maybe two. Three if you're feeling generous, but...

You glance at Mami, and she seems to be trying hard not to smile. She nods as you catch her eye, however. Still genuinely puzzled, you shrug your shoulders, and say that if she wants you to stay, you will. It's just that you need a drink first, and then some sleep.

"A-alright." Iori nods, clearly relieved. "Please...please don't leave without at least giving me your cellphone number, okay? Chiaki-san, please don't forget."

You promise her you won't, before you step out and let Mami do her thing. It was a strange request, but certainly harmless.

Heading back out into the suite proper, you sit down at the lip of the bed, propping one wet stocking-clad foot on the unconscious magical girl's back. You light a cigarette - no, you make it two - and breathe in the smoke that you've been deprived of for a while.

There's something to be said about smoking in a room full of dead bodies.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Deculture 06/27/12(Wed)07:37 No.19647104

You are a Magical Girl, and you're currently drinking yourself to death in your own shithole of an aparment.

Well, not death, but somewhere close to it. As close as two bottles of whisky and an entire bottle of pills will get you.

It has been exactly forty-eight hours since you saved your client from being raped by a heavily-armed, heavily-equipped group of otakus and having the whole sordid thing recorded and put on some paysite on the Internet. To their credit, they almost got through with it - thanks to the magical girl that had you trapped in some sort of living nightmare.

Thanks to the pink-haired demon in your own nightmares, you managed to wake up just in time. It wasn't your best job by your standards, but hey, at least the client got what she paid for.

Five kills. The Magical Girl permanently disabled, kept in stasis and locked in the safest room in the city. Her Soul Gem is with you - actually, it's in front of you, dunked in a glass of room-temperature whisky. Not the one you're currently drinking from, of course, that would be unhygienic. It's the one you pour out every time you go drinking, in remembrance of memories too painful to actually remember.

You hear a knock on the door, barely audible from the television currently blasting out old fuzzy reruns of Baseball Bat Boy. You glance blearily at the solitary clock that adorns the nigh-empty wall of your apartment. It's late afternoon, and you're not expecting visitors. Well, you are, but nothing important.

What do you do?

Get our stuff together, we should probably do a good interrogation of Emi.

See if she is a freelancer, whether she did this for kicks, how long she'd been a magical girl, who recruited her. That sort of thing. It'll also be a good chance for us to work out our frustrations.

You glance at the door, and then at the gaudy, blocky firearm sitting on your side table - and it's then that you murmur a curse underneath your breath as you lever yourself off of your very comfortable and very expensive-looking green chair. You're not one for furniture, but after the debacle at the Hotel Suite, you thought you'd take a little souvenir, something to remember that particular assignment by.

It took a while to get the huge chair into your inventory, but it was worth it. Really, really worth it.

You drain your glass of whisky, before placing it back onto the side table to pick up the gun Pinky had been kind enough to give you. You wipe your lips with the back of your other hand as you make your way toward the door, your bare feet making no noise on the unadorned, cold tile floor.

There's no one there.

You squint downwards, and see a familiar white mutant cat with startlingly-bright crimson eyes, fastidiously licking the back of its paw.

Well. It seems that it's time for your debriefing.

What do you do?

You lower the lid of the peephole, before undoing the three locks that kept your door secure enough from being broken into: two deadbolts, one at the top, one at the bottom, and a chain lock near the doorknob. You pull the door open just a little bit, enough to let the white furry creature pass through - and as he does so, you contemplate suddenly kicking the door shut, crushing your employer between door and door jamb.

It's a delightfully puerile thought, and one you don't go through as the Incubator finally manages to squeeze his way into your sparsely-decorated apartment.

If you count crates of stolen alcohol and explosives laying about as sparse, of course. Oh, and don't forget that strange heavy rifle with the chainsaw bayonet stashed near your umbrella stand.

"As usual, you never fail to impress upon me how little you care about your own comfort or that of your guest's, Matsuda." Kyuubey says, glancing at the television, where Baseball Bat Boy seems to be in a heated debate with Bicycle Helmet Girl about cooties. You shut the door behind him, engage the locks once more, and make a beeline back to your new chair, dropping down onto it with a whumpf. "I'd ask you why you didn't go directly to HQ for your debriefing, but I suppose I could guess why."

You say nothing, pouring yourself another finger or two of whisky.

"...Right. Your debriefing, then. Let's hear your version of what actually happened."

How do you recount the previous events?

Went to the hotel, convinced the security to shape up.

Was in the room with the principal when what at the time seemed to be her friend showed up.

Did pat down, clear of weapons, nothing seemed overly strange.

Sat by bed as they went to sleep. Strangeness occured, stuck in dreamlike state, her "friend" was with me, said that goons were raping principal.

Broke out of dream through sheer grit, killed rapists, one of whom was the head of security, before anything major happened, blew off the legs of the magical girl, whose name was revealed to be Midori. I'll get more information on the assailants after interrogation.

Comforted principal, called Mami, stayed there at principal's request for some time.

Returned home, drank like a fish, didn't bother seeing you.

You give him the truncated version of events, like you always do in debriefings. The little bastard doesn't really need to do this, of course - knowing him and his connections, he probably had everything on videotape. This is just him checking to see if anything is amiss about you - or at least that's what you think.

You avoid mentioning Pinky. He doesn't need to know. No one needs to know.

"That sounds about right, yes." The Incubator says after you finish, once more licking the back of its paw and then wiping it all over its face in that way cats usually do. "As it turns out, the leader of Minase Iori's security detail was a member of the same group that raped Takatsuki Yayoi. The rest of the security detail were innocent, but they were gunned down in a protracted firefight."

The white mutant cat pauses for a bit to glance at the golden Desert Eagle you've placed back on your side table before continuing. "As... as for the Magical Girl, we've stabilized her for now in the Silent Room, but since her Soul Gem is in your custody, she's just a warm body for now. Should you choose to interrogate her, try and find out who she's working for. Someone like her may be in the same situation as you, which means there's another incubator lurking about."

"...I think a stern lecture here about not falling so easily to magical traps is in order here, but since your client is strangely satisfied with your performance, I've decided to forgo that." It places a forepaw on the floor before it, forming a shadow on the bare white tile - and from that shadow, two grief seeds pop out, rolling on the floor momentarily before balancing themselves on their spines. "Your payment, as agreed upon. Your salary has been wired to your own account, and I do hope you remember how to access it."

It seems to hesitate at first, before letting out a sigh. "Try to do better next time. In any case, you have two assignments lined up. Since they're priority, pick one, and Kyoko will take the other."

You're not really listening right now. You're busy strangely thinking about a brown-haired idol with crimson eyes.

You drain your glass, and pour yourself another, as the Incubator starts to babble.

It clears its throat before continuing.

"Alright. The first one comes from one of our older customer. He's paid upfront for a hit on the Inagawa-kai Yakuza's overboss, Shinobu Tsukasa." Kyuubey pauses for a moment. "We don't usually take contracts out for Yakuza members, especially for high-ranking ones, but I'm considering it a part of our social service policy."

You smirk at this as you chase a couple of painkillers with a gulp of whisky, letting the bitter taste of the medication blossom on your tongue before drowning them in the heat of the alcohol.

"The second is a retirement one. Kirika Kure's...she's killed both of her principals in two assignments already. I believe it's time we end her relationship with our firm."

Retirement. Decommission. A pretty way of saying that the pressure's finally gotten to you, and you need to be dealt with cleanly, before you make the firm lose more revenue.

"One grief seed for the first assignment, and a bonus to your salary for the second. You can keep any salvage you get from Kirika, too. As always, you get your detailed dossier about the assignment you pick in a day or so."

And why would you do that ?

We have already killed an incubator last time. There is a line between "I don't like you" and "I'm dangerous to you", and killing a QB twice in a row when he only want to brief and debrief you is dangerously close of being seen as a dangerous psychopath.

That's what we are. That's what QB think about us. But if we keep pushing him, it is possible he would want to do something about us.

I don't like QB, I distrust QB, but I don't want him actively trying to kill us.

Tilt our glass back and drain it. Killing Yakuza would just be a foregone conclusion, but Kyoko's the type who would love the fight for what it was. "The second assignment? Very well. I'll have Sakura Kyoko take the first one. You'll get your dossier via secured courier by noon tomorrow." Kyuubey nods again, his crimson eyes staring up at you intently. "To be honest, I was expecting you to pick the Yakuza one, but then again, there's bad blood between you and Kure, isn't there?"

You drain your glass of its remaining amber liquid and refill it just as quickly. Bad blood wouldn't be the term you'd use to describe your association with Kirika Kure - it was closer, really, to all-out antagonistic. You hated each other, not even in that rival kind of way where you respected each other's professionalism grudgingly. You just didn't like her, she didn't like you, and more than once it almost came to both of you trying to kill each other. Kyuubey had always done the smart thing to never pair you up in a difficult assignment, because nothing would ever get done.

You knew she was sort of...crazy, but she was the best close-combat specialist in the firm. Not even Kyoko or Sayaka could ever hope to come close to Kure in a fair fight, and it usually never was.

You idly wonder, then, who would be sent to retire you when the day comes.

"Do you have any other questions, Matsuda? If not, I have other things to do. Places to go, people to see, and another Magical Girl to recruit - seeing as a slot will be opening up soon."

It seems Kyuubey is all too ready to leave.

You sit up from your reclined position, turning towards Kyuubey. This new recruit...it can't possibly be someone you're familiar with, right? No one with a future deserves to be reduced to something like you.

You ask the question, trying very hard not to sound like you care.

"I've a few prospects, but nothing final as of the moment. There's one very potential candidate I'm interested in, however, as she's got quite the gift for it." The incubator tilts its head slightly to side. "Why the sudden curiosity? Either way, you'll know about who she is in the next all hands meeting anyway, right?"

Typical answer from the little creep. Vague as hell and laden with innocence, trying to make you feel stupid for even asking it even WHEN it should be asked.

"If there's nothing else, then I'll go ahead and leave you to your...activities. Whatever they are." The white-furred creature scampers across the room, hopping up onto a windowsill. "And for goodness' sake, Matsuda, try and clean up your apartment. It's supposed to be a living space, not an armory.

You make to stand up and grab him by the tail, frowning at that last comment - but unfortunately he's gone before you could even pull yourself away from your chair's comfy, comfy grasp. Just as well, making another kickball out of the little bastard probably wasn't worth getting up anyway.

Man, you really like this chair. This chair, it's the best. It really is.

You spend a moment of leaning back and closing your eyes to the sound of Baseball Bat Boy cracking a criminal's face open with the butt of his bat, before you reach out to take your cellphone from your side table, nearly knocking over the glass containing Midori's Soul Gem over. Flipping it open, you search your contacts list for a certain idol's number and call it.

You're currently sauced at the moment, so you're in a bit of a better mood than before, and it kind of shows when you ask her how she's doing. It's a bit unprecedented, you asking about a principal after the assignment - much more you actually calling them up. Iori sounds a bit surprised and pleased, in any case.

"O-oh. I'm fine, Chiaki-san. I've...my producer has convinced me to postpone my tour for a few months. He says that it's for me to lay low for a while, since the media somehow caught wind of what happened, but I think it's really him just wanting to give me a break." She giggles, slightly. "A-anyway, Mami Tomoe-san is here escorting me to a safehouse I'll be staying in for the duration. She told me it's the--" hasty voices and giggling in the background, not Iori for sure, but someone you recognize by their voice. "--it's the safest place in the city at the moment."

Well. The giggling's a bit weird, but that's a good thing, right? And she's with Mami, so she's safe. The safehouse, though...you wonder where it is.

You ask as nonchalantly as you can.

"Huh? Where is it? Um...er..." More giggling. More voices. "M-Mami-san says you're really familiar with it, so you don't need to know. Anyway, it seems we're here...ah, alright, Mami-san, I'm going to knock."

You furrow your eyebrows, and make to ask again, when suddenly someone knocks at your door again. Three times, just like how Iori knocked on the door on her end three times.

". . ."

Shit.

What do you do?

Short answer: watch Madoka to find out.
Long answer: he pesters young girls into making a contract. In exchange of a wish, you get to dress as a magical girl and fight witches, and you have to keep doing it, lest you become one.
Witches are, in a few words, monsters born from your despair and inner mind. It's a fate worse than death.

You narrow your eyes at the door, then at the phone, before letting out a small sigh - even as a small smile curls the corners of your lips. This is exactly why you don't let coworkers know where you live, you tell yourself. You thought Mami would be an exception, but she did save you from an overdose the last time, so it was really more of a favor to yourself.

Well, if they're playing it that way...

You place your glass back onto the side table and then grab the bottle of Kong Whisky you've been trying to kill for a while now by the neck. Rising from your ridiculously comfortable chair, you make your way towards the door - not bothering for a last minute clean up, and certainly not throwing something decent on. If this is Mami's ploy to get at you, then this is you returning fire.

You wedge your phone between ear and shoulder to free up the hand that undoes the locks and pulls the door a tiny crack.

Well, it's them all right. Both of them trying to keep straight faces. Mami in particular, although she's got the best poker face in the business.

May change soon enough, that.

You pull the door enough for them to see you. All of you.

All of your sports bra wearing, white panties styling, booze-swigging self. And you're still talking to Iori on the phone, who is coincidentally right in front of you.

Both girls' eyes widen at your appearance, and both of them redden at the same time. You get the most reaction out of Iori, however, while Mami only smiles sheepishly, knowing that she's outdone.

You smile slightly at them, before ending the call and folding your phone close.

"Chiaki-chan, sorry for the short notice." Mami breaks the awkward silence with a smile and a stifled giggle. "I'm here with Minase-san to escort her to her safehouse. She'll be staying here for a month or so. Can we come in?"

"C-Chiaki-san..." Iori is mumbling, cheeks burning. "S-s-so...daring..."

You manage not to make that much of a fool out of yourself at your complete surprise at this development. Actually, you're playing it very cool, only raising an eyebrow as Mami steps over the threshold of your apartment, while Iori meekly bows her head, still red as a tomato. Of course, she's still staring, but not for lack of trying to avert her eyes.

"Oh, don't make that face, Chiaki-chan. It's only going to be a month or so. Two months, at the most. She needs somewhere that's secure and away from the media, so we chose your apartment."

You close the door behind them and slap the locks on. You take a swig from your bottle of Kong, before asking Mami why the hell didn't they just put her in the HQ living quarters instead?

"She can't very well stay there for a month, Chiaki-chan. We all have homes of our own, and do you think she'll be able to sleep with the racket some of us make at night? Be serious, here, please." Mami seems to have found a can of Febreze in your kitchen and spraying it into the apartment - trying to get the smell of alcohol and cigarette smoke, no doubt. Meanwhile Iori seems to be busy...standing around, uncertain of what to do. You point her towards the chair you stole, and she obediently sits there, as if scared to upset you.

You turn to Mami again, bringing up the fact that no one will be around to protect her when you're away on assignments.

"That's easy. Whenever you're on duty, one of us back at the HQ will come over and keep her company. Us being Sayaka, Kyoko and yours truly." Mami smiles, before walking over and pulling up the garter of your panties just a bit, before snapping it back painfully. "And we'll do it with most of our clothes on, we promise."

No good. Just like Mami to know all the answers to the questions you've even yet to ask. You're so outclassed here it's not even fair, and you only shake your head and take another swig from the bottle of Kong in your hand.

After a moment, you grumble something at Mami's direction, and she nods, seemingly pleased with herself.

"Is that all you want, Chiaki-chan? Well, certainly! I'll make you a batch right now, and just because you're being such a good sport about this, I'll even stock your kitchen for you, so you don't have to order out every night!"

You didn't...ask that, but okay. You open your mouth to reiterate your original sentence, but Mami suddenly comes up close, talking in low, conspiratorial tones.

"I'm not supposed to tell you this, Chiaki-chan, but she came up with the idea herself. Actually, she insisted that we make her stay at your place, and put it across as our idea."

She quickly steps back and smiles. "And I'm not implying anything that needs to be implied right now." She clears her throat, before speaking in a louder voice. "O-oh! I'll work on those pancakes right away, Chiaki-sama, please don't glare at me so much!"

Giggling, she scurries off towards the kitchen, glancing back at you and Iori every so often. A moment, and you hear the familiar hum of the refrigerator being switched on. You don't really use it much, so you keep it deactivated.

Now it's just you and Iori in the...living room. Alone, for the most part. And she's looking at you expectantly.

Awkward.

The awkwardness lasts for a good while before you move towards the chair you fell asleep in and almost got the idol now sitting on it raped. You place the now nearly-empty bottle back onto the side table, before turning around and sitting on the chair's soft armrest. Your back to Iori's side.

You let out a small sigh, before ask her the one question that needed to be asked before anything else.

She answers almost too quickly.

"Y-yes. Yes, I'm alright with living here with you, Chiaki-san. It's...I know you probably think of me as some sort of primadonna that's used to luxury, b-but I'm not, I promise." She smiles at you as you turn towards her. "I'll keep, and I will do my best not to be a burden."

You're silent for a moment, before you nod and stand up from the armrest, turning fully to face her. It's then that you give her a few simple rules about your apartment - how not to handle the guns until you've taught her to, how to treat every gun she sees as loaded and dangerous (even if it's apparent to the contrary) and that to never do anything with your pills or your alcohol. You tell her that you'll be teaching her how to handle basic firearms one day, when you're free.

She takes all this surprisingly well, eagerly nodding, hanging on to your every word. You notice this and you can't help but redden.

"I understand completely, Chiaki-san." Iori nods after you finish, smiling. 'I hope we get along well. Please take care of me."

Great. Really great.

Well, at least Mami seems to be doing some good in your unused kitchen. You're already smelling some very nice pancakes being made, even if it's nearing evening.

You're tempted to ask her if she has an ulterior motive to all this. You know, besides already seeing you in your underwear.

You see her pale slightly at this question, even though you've tried your best to say it in a casual tone. You don't stick around to see why, having moved to the small dresser at the corner of the apartment, where you keep a scant few clothes (and a good amount of clean underwear). after a moment, you pull on a white shirt and black spats. That'll do for now.

She seems to have her answer prepared as you walk back to her, straightening your clothes. "I...Mami-san and I helped me look into where the real Yayoi is. As it turns out, she never really recovered. She...killed herself a few weeks after that incident, but it was covered up. I should've known, because when Yayoi started calling me, she seemed to be really different. I thought it was just something related to what happened to her, but now I realize that I'd been talking and comforting and encouraging someone who never needed it in the first place." Iori smiles sadly at you. "I'm here, Chiaki-san, because you're the only person I know, here. Yayoi was the only one I knew in this city. With her gone, it's...it's just you. I'm sorry."

She's slightly tearful at this, but she gamely wipes them away from the corner of her eyes with the back of her hand. After a moment, she giggles, even if it sounds forced.

She watches you refill the empty glass, as if enraptured by the dark amber liquid.

"Do...do you really need to drink that much, Chiaki-san...?"

You pick up the glass, drain it, and say yes. Passing her the remote, you tell her to surf the channels a bit to pass the time - you've got something to ask Mami.

You step into the kitchen, where an apron-wearing blonde is humming a pleasant tune while fixing you your pancakes. You're like a child, really.

You stop and stare at the skirt-clad bottom swaying to the tune's beat, distracting you more than the scent of fluffy pancakes.

You shake your head, and ask quietly about Kyuubey and the replacement about to take Kirika's place.

"...I'm not sure if it's Minase-san or not," Mami says after a moment. "She's not anything like us, is she? She's got a future. Plus, she's still at the peak of her career. People will notice when she's gone." She shakes her head, drills bobbing softly from side to side. "We're nobodies. People are already if we die, so long as we take out as many monsters of them as we do it."

Well. That's a relief. Of sorts.

"Don't worry too much about it, Matsuda-san. Kyuubey means well, even if his methods are a bit suspect at times." She piles on two freshly-made pancakes onto your plate, which already has a few pancakes drowning in syrup already. "Here. Share with her if you want. The sugar should perk you both up."

Anyway - Pancakes!!! It's pretty much the best thing you can have in this world that doesn't somehow harm others or your own body... stuff one in your mouth right away, go back o Iori, offer her some.
Chewing is good enough excuse for not talking and you still need some time to think and sort out all the news.

Still should warn her though. Cleopatra and Joan of Arc were both magical girls, so it's not too far fetched to imagine QB recruiting her.

What would ruin our entire existence even more than Iori going Puella Magica?

You immediately take a fork from the paltry amount of plastic utensils you've collected from the various food deliveries you've paid for, ad immediately stab it into the top pancake, cramming the syrup-soaked goodness into your mouth. It's still hot, but you don't care. For a mouth used to tasting whisky and painkillers, Mami's soft, feather-light pancakes tasted like food literally from the gods.

So good, it's almost illegal.

Your mouth still full, you mumble thanks, give her a small pat on the bottom, before walking out with the plate and another fork. You sit back down on the armrest, and unable to talk, you push the plate towards Iori - who blinks, before smiling and taking you up on your offer. She discovers the miracle that is food made by Mami with gusto, and you let her. The blonde's still making a batch, anyway.

You glance at the TV, which Iori had flipped to the news. No mention yet of what happened to the Hotel, but there has been a spate of brutal killings of powerful politicians. You know Kirika must be involved somehow - only she could transform a murder scene into a charnel house.

You've got an idol living with you, now. And you're basically being paid to kill a colleague. A hated colleague, sure, but still...

You swallow, and pat Iori's shoulder. She blinks up at you, innocently.

You tell her, in no uncertain terms, not to listen or talk to any white cats with crimson eyes. Or cats that talk. Cats don't really talk, not when you're sober.

She nearly chokes as she giggles at this, asking you if you're trying to make her laugh.

"Y-yes, Chiaki-san. I promise. No mutant cats telling me what to do. Really."

Good. At least that's one thing sorted out of this mess.

In either case, because of the way girls like she and ourselves work, we need to make sure we don't just graze or severely injure her, because anything like that can be repaired with magic. Might be an option, depending on how fast she really is now...

Also from what I understand, she didn't really "turn" yet, she's just set on downward spiral. The really fast one. Not the classy slow one which takes excruciatingly long like our beloved protagonist.

That's a good plan. We've got some nice, innocent girl staying at our place, so we should probably be on our best behavior. So let's work out those dark impulses on someone who both deserves it, and has something to offer. After a few hours of brutalizing her, we ought to be able to keep cheerful for a few days. After that, we've got work to keep us 'normal'.

Shake down her house for any Grief seeds you mean.

So Kirika is a fast CQC with killer claws and time-stop. Or time acceleration. A sniper should do it, so should prox mines and remote explosives.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Deculture 06/29/12(Fri)11:23 No.19671721

'Things' being another girl, in your sparsely-furnished gun rack of an apartment, wearing a nigh-transparent nightgown over lingerie. Her arms around you, all warm-like and cuddly and soft. Her long brown hair pooling on the cheap, thin pillows that came with the two-person futon you stole from a department store you were engaged in a heated firefight in (they were practically giving it away anyway, at half price).

You're not a physically intimate person. Physical intimacy is not you. The extent of physical intimacy you're willing to go with someone other than you is when you're doing your level best to shove a gun barrel into their mouth so the discharge won't make as much noise.

Through the dull pain of your familiar hangover - a soft, prickling throbbing at your temples that cried out for, well, a glass full of whiskey and a couple of painkillers - you try to remember just what happened last night. And what led to it.

Kyuubey. Debriefing. Retiring Kirika Kure. Minase Iori. A few months. Safehouse. Mami Tomoe. Pancakes.

The words flash by as your alcohol-addled mind connects each of them slowly, with painful progress, and you wince as they finally come together.

>>19671721

For some reason, it was agreed upon that Minase Iori, your principal from your last assignment, would be using your apartment as a safehouse for a few months. This meant, of course, that certain standards would have to be maintained, and certain habits would have to be curbed. Certain changes would have to be...tolerated.

These changes seem to include, of course, waking up in the morning with an overly-clingy idol hugging you like you're some kind of full-body pillow with a cheap 2D girl printed on its case.

You grope around for your glasses, and you find them underneath your own pillow. Squinting blearily at the blinds covering the windows of your apartment, you realize that it's already late morning, in fact. Mami, who had slept over, seems to have already left - and she'd already made you a stack of pancakes, dripping with syrup, placed on the side table near your stolen recliner.

The dossier of your next assignment seems to have come in early today, as it's there with the pancakes, placed right beside it.

Time to get to work, you surmise. How?

[]Push Iori off and stagger to your favorite chair in the whole wide world.

The temptation to simply push Iori off of you and shove her back to HER side of the futon is enough to make you consider it, but...she's sleeping much too peacefully for that. So peacefully and so deeply that you can't help but feel envious for just a bit. And Mami did tell you that the idol hadn't been sleeping right at all since the attack at the Hotel, so...

Fine. Fine. Maybe you'll give the gracious, polite houseguest routine a fair shot. Just for today.

You inch your way out of the futon and out of Iori's grasp, careful not to disturb her too much. The process is painstakingly slow and it's not really doing you any favors, making a few regular complaints here and there flare up. But you manage it anyway, as evidenced by the idol's still-deep breathing. You've replaced the vaccuum you left in her arms with your own pillow, and she seems to be hugging it REALLY tight now.

Standing up, you glance down at the idol, before shaking your head again. You make your way to the dossier, as quietly as bare feet on bare tile would allow. Picking up the fork with your hand, you stab it into the pancake at the top of the pile, lifting the entire syrup-soaked thing up to your face as you snatch up the dossier envelope with your other hand.

You hear Iori murmur your first name in her sleep, making you blink in surprise. That's...weird. Probably an idol thing, you think as you shrug it off.

You cram the pancake into your own mouth without a second thought, place the fork down, and then pull the dossier open.

...Huh. Well. This is a bit more detailed of a dossier than you're used to. Dossiers have always been tissue-thin, with scant information that would invariably get you almost killed. This...this was Kirika Kure's life, printed in neat A4 paper, 12-point Verdana, double-spaced, totalling twenty sheets all in all.

You sink into your favorite chair just as you light your first cigarette of the day. A puff of smoke escaping your frowning lips.

Why can't Kyuubey's dossiers be this detailed for EVERYTHING?

Kirika Kure. Seventeen years old. Three years into the service, contracted by Kyuubey personally. Her wish - to be strong enough to protect someone she loves, or something like that. As you remember, she's a beast in close quarters, able to outfight Sayaka and Kyouko (even both of them, at the same time). 120 missions. 400 hostiles killed, Witches included.

Retired five Magical Girls personally. Uses her personal weapon, a single katana, more often than she uses the psychic claws she'd been famous for. Her attack plans usually involve direct assaults, forgoing stealth and surprise for sheer force of strength. Not a very big fan of firearms - you heard her ruefully remark about them being cowardly weapons. She usually makes those comments when you're in the vicinity, too, but never with Mami around. Has the same kind of time dilation power as you, albeit in a reduced capacity and effectivity. She uses it mainly to dodge and appear to be inhumanly fast, but she already is without it.

People of importance - there's the usual list of classmates and friends, but you know only one or two are of real significance. In fact, you've heard about her before - Mikuni Oriko, a girl in Kirika's class. Someone from the outside who doesn't know about her best friend's true line of work. You heard Kirika warn Kyouko loudly about keeping her hands off of Oriko, unless she wanted them torn off and shoved into her anus.

Projected Schedule of Activity is where you laughed at Kyuubey's kind of cunning. The little mutant cat had actually sent Kirika on a fake assignment, taking place later tonight.

Kyuubey may be annoying, but he seems to know what he's doing.

Fucking cat.

Makes you wonder when we're going to get retired, and who he'll send. Maybe Mami.

Let's see what the fake assignment is; maybe we can plan around that.

You stub out your spent cigarette on your now-empty plate as you place the dossier back on the side table. The plate itself you leave on top of the envelope, and you recline back on your seat as you try to gather your thoughts.

You can probably call either Kyoko or Sayaka to know more about Kirika and possible gaps in her defense. Mami...she tries to be nice to everyone, but she hasn't really been in an altercation with Kirika to help enough.

There's also Mikuni Oriko to consider. It's not your style, but you could use her closeness to Kirika to your advantage. A simple abduction job, get her in a clearing, wait for Kirika to show, and snipe her from as far away as possible.

The plan's attractive, but it leaves a bad taste in your mouth.

What do you do?

Realistically we want to get a high caliber rifle and disable her from a distance then we can get her soul gem from her. I would say stop time and fire about a dozen shots into her arms and legs so that we are sure of making her incapacitated. You light another cigarette as you turn things over in your head. Kyuubey's little goose chase for Kirika is pretty much a run-of-the-mill assassination one - a politician, a typical corrupt blowhard with his own helicopter and a vested interest in some shady dealings you yourself have been sent to 'mediate' some time back. Normally, political targets would be something Kyuubey would leave well alone, as most of your customers ARE politicians, but sometimes they needed pruning. Needed to be shown who really controlled the city.

The hit would take place on Mitakihara Tower One, the first skyscraper built on the city. The politician would be arriving via helicopter as always, the helipad at the very top floor (which is sixty stories up). Kirika would no doubt wait for the target to disembark from the helicopter before moving in and making a gruesome mess of things. She'd probably use the helicopter rotor to dismember the guy.

Fortunately for you, there are nearby skyscrapers, all taller than Tower One, which would give you a nice line of sight. You probably just need a good rifle for it.

Behind you, Iori murmurs your name, just a little bit louder this time.

You drain your glass, pick up your cellphone, and speed-dial the lesser of the two evils (although really, you could do without calling either of them at all).

It takes four rings for Kyoko Sakura to get her ass off of bed and pick up her landline. The girl doesn't exactly take care of her own cellphone much, any case.

"What the...? Murderface, do you have any idea what the time is? You're calling me up NOW?" Comes Kyoko's incredulous, still sleep-addled voice, clearly offended at being woken up from a nice sleep. There's a muffled voice in the background, as well as the rustling of cloth, but Kyoko seems to ignore it. "Look, if you're calling to trade assignments, no deal. You know I've been jonesing for a Yakuza target for two months now!" Her voice reaches a plaintive note. "It's not even fair that you got to pick, but since you did, you're stuck with that escort assignment of yours, and there's nothing you can do to change my mind!"

BUT. We are here to off a melee specialist, and our primary strength is our range sniping. If we move in, talk to her, and she tries to kill us in self defense, we're dead. If we shoot her, try to talk to her, and it wasn't enough to kill her, we're dead.

So if we are going to try to kill her, either because we want to finish the mission or because she fights back, we probably have to do it when we have the advantage, not her.

THAT SAID, if we shoot her, talk to her, and find out she's a potential ally now that we share visions... well, that could be the entire point of this, to off our potential allies before we realize we need them.

We need to think about this carefully, is what I'm saying.

You murmur a hasty but hopefully sincere-sounding apology before asking Kyoko about how Kirika actually fights. Sure, you've seen footage of her fighting, but it doesn't really work if all you see recorded is one black blur flitting from freshly-murdered corpse to corpse.

"Ah, forget about it. Water under the bridge, far as I'm concerned. Just don't drink too much and we can consider the tab settled." She clears her throat. "Anyway, uh, fighting style, is it? Well...she's been favoring that sword of hers a whole lot ever since she got it. I don't know where she did get it, but the blade's pretty expensive looking. Not sure how you can forge gold that strong, so maybe it's plated, but I'm not sure..."

Some mumbling in the background. "No, it's Murderface. Asking about...stuff." You hear Kyoko's muffled voice. More mumbling. "Anyway, she's been using that sword a lot. She's always going for those draw-strike scenarios, I think. Iajutsu or something. I kind of miss the more direct Kirika who uses her claws, though. Then she'd go all velociraptor style on you, jumpin' and chargin' right into your face to claw your eyes out."

You could hear her shrug over the line.

"But using a pig sticker like that seems to work out for her, so I guess. If you disarm her somehow, that'd probably shock her long enough for a good hit. Why are you asking, anyway?"

I vote that we quietly contact Kirika and get to the bottom of this mystery before we think about even killing her off.

As far as we're concerned, the time elapsed from the time we called Kyoko, it's probably close to 10:30.

That means we, in the next hour up until lunchtime, we should use that time to contact Kirika.

After that, we basically have the rest of the afternoon, say, 1 to 5 pm, to prepare for the "retirement" operation, depending if we actually want to kill Kirika, or just stage her death.

There's a moment of silence between the both of you before it's broken by none other than Kyoko herself. "Oh, well. That's fine, then. Just make sure to steer clear from her when you hear her coming - it's not that hard. Simply go in the opposite direction of the screams and such."

Kyoko's not the sharpest knife in the drawer, but such a thing has come in handy in quite a number of occasions. So you don't point it out in this particular instance, as she did just help you get some crucial information about your new target.

You start to thank her, and it's then that a fey mood catches onto you all of a sudden, despite the somewhat strained air between the two of you. Speaking in that same, deadpan tone, you remind her of the duty split up between her, Sayaka and Mami - complete with the pause, and everything.

"Y-yeah. I'll...I'll make sure she gets that, Murderface. I'm sure she'll be happy to see it."

You thank her for that, and gently remind her that your name is now Chiaki Matsuda, not that nickname.

"Murderface is Murderface, what's the difference? Anyway, I gotta cook breakfast. Later, and tell me how it goes when it's done, alright?"

Sure. Sure you will, you promise Kyoko.

She bids you goodbye and ends the call. You fold your phone close, massage the bridge of your nose with two fingers, and then sigh.

That was the easiest part. Now came the hard part. You're somewhat back at Square One, but where would the fun in that be?

Yeah she basically hates us with the intensity of the sun

The hatred she has for Kyoko is small time in comparison so she is a hostile even before this mission came up

We need a way to interrogate her either prior to killing her or interrogate her through her souls tone

Is tempting, but I guess we have teased them enought. For now at least.
So...
>[x]Think of another plan, quick.
She seems to be sort of attached to the blade, so just damaging it/crippling her so she can't use it could stop her for for a while. IIRC pinkie (finger) is important for "proper" katana wielding - the reason why some Yakuzas cut their pinkie off when they fail a mission (sort ritual punishmen, admitting uselessness - is that a word?) anyway - sniping her pinkie off would be stylish.

As for negotiations - she stabbed Kyoko's eye out in one of her fits, and I don't think she would have much to talk about.

We might timestop before mission brifly and talk with Pinky, but not in this appartment and especially not when any other people are around.

See I think while QB is having us retire her it is a double thing
First he is seeing if we are actually working with her since we both have golden weapons. Second he is testing our loyalty to him so he knows whether to line us up next and third as a way to get rid of Kirika since maybe since seeing pinky she has gone off the deep end a bit

Not that she was very sane to begin with but whereas we had a fit and tore our hair our when talking to pinky apparently Kirika just tried cutting Kyoko up which is a bit different

Yes there is time for meetings. Didn't you pay attention to the clock when we called Kyoko?

There are reasons why trying not to kill/fatally injure, or capture an opponent who’s trying to kill you is exponentially dangerous to everyone involved. A big problem in this setting involves the degree of control.mastery with regards to one's own Soul Gem.

Plan A was to snipe her with a 20mm Anti-Tank Rifle from Spot B, the slightly less optimal sniper position, while trapping Spot A, the optimal sniper position, to Hell and back. We leave a radio on the rooftop so that after we disable Kirika, we can talk to her while we keep a sniper rifle trained on her.

Let me take a theoretical run at this golden weapon buisness and see what you guys think. - Both of us are put into a situation where we use our time tampering abilities, pinky manifests herself and we take her assistance and come out of it with a gold weapon each. Now Kirika has been using hers exclusively and has ended up murdering people left right and centre and spouting the same kind of gibberish we were when we first met pinky. Probably obvious but I'm thinking we might want to avoid using that deagle as much as we can.

I'm not saying we SHOULD go rogue. But if, say, we share common goals with a fellow vision victim, we need some sort of plan to give her to make her want to work together. If it turns out that we're just being used to kill off other golden weapon users before we figure out the importance of said weapons, we'll want some sort of plan on how to get out of dodge.

We have a plan of how to deal with her if we need to kill her. We... don't have so much if it turns out Kirika needs protection/ a way out.

The problem then is what to do with our waifu... We need to get the other girls invested in helping her should something bad happen and we have to go on the lam.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 07/01/12(Sun)03:26 No.19693145

You are a Magical Girl, and you are certainly not on the long, slow, downward spiral into slavering madness.

Well, no. You're not really sure about that.

Your current assignment, picked from a choice of two, is to send a fellow Magical Girl into the great Deli Heal Agency in the sky. It's nothing personal, but you know the target well enough that it very well could get to that point. Your employer has simply decided that she has become more trouble than she's worth - a unfortunate and regretful liability that must be dealt in the quickest way possible to preserve inter-client relations and revenue stream integrity in a going-forward paradigm.

It's not the killing that leaves a bad taste in your mouth. It's the fact that you have to.

You are in your apartment, with a former client still snoozing in your futon behind you. You're currently sitting in your new favorite chair, and you're planning about how to kill Kirika Kure.

In a move typical of the cunning little rat, Kyuubey has sent Kirika on a dummy assignment, to take place around nine hours from now, night time. A straight assassination mission involving some forgettable politician, on the Helipad of Mitakihara Tower One. You've entertained the idea of rigging the entire helipad with explosives and sniping her from a neighboring skyscraper, but a call to Sakura Kyoko is making you second-guess that plan.

Namely, the fact about her having gone somewhat rogue after getting a mysterious gold-bladed katana. Similar to the golden Desert Eagle a certain pink-haired nightmare had given you.

You examine the gun itself in your hands, turning it around, looking for cursed symbols or rot like that. It weighs like a typical gun of its make, it doesn't necessarily shoot more accurately or harder than a regular version Desert Eagle. It certainly doesn't have unlimited ammunition, which you feel would be handy.

What do you do?

You decide to call Kirika Kure. It's not your worst idea ever - calling up not only someone you've had a lot of enmity with, but also someone you've been appointed to put down - but it's certainly up there.

You get her number from Mami through a text message, with her slightly puzzled as to why you would want to talk to someone like Kirika. You leave the question unanswered, and you dial the target's number digit by digit.

You initiate the call, and it takes Kirika three rings before she picks up.

"Kirika Kure. Who is this?" Your target's is silky-smooth, properly pronounced, with a bit of purr at the end. You've forgotten that, all told, Kirika has a very nice voice, the type you'd want to hear welcoming you back home and insisting that bed should be the next immediate item on the itinerary. You don't forget, of course, that she has an almost fetish-like penchant of ripping open her target's stomach and watching their intestines flop out.

"Hello?" She tries again. "If this is a prank call, remember that there exists phone tracking technology, and I will triangulate your position and kill you in your sleep."

Lovely. How do you proceed with your call?

[]Introduce yourself, and ask about her golden katana.

You clear your throat and keep your voice low as you introduce yourself.

"Chiaki Matsuda...? I'm afraid I don't..." Kirika pauses for a moment, seemingly confused, before laughing softly. "Oh. Wait. I recognize your voice. The damage to your voice with all that drinking and smoking makes you unmistakable, Murderface. You should really do away with those dreadful habits of yours, they're not doing you any favors."

...This is surprising too. You're actually carrying on a normal-sounding conversation with a known mass murderer. You're not sure, but you certainly don't hear the same amount of vitriol and layer-thick venom in her voice that you usually hear. You thank her for her concern, and go right to the point - about her new little golden toy she's been shanking people with.

Yes, it's quite the fine blade, isn't it? The gold is a bit too gaudy or me, but it's got an exquisitely sharp edge that doesn't seem to dull no matter what I cut. I even managed to cut through a European broadsword with it, like butter with a warm knife. Can you believe it?"

Ah, there it was. That none-too-subtle dig. Fine, very funny. You ignore it, and ask about where she got it.

"...Before I answer that question, I must ask about this sudden interest in my worktools. I'd have expected this call from Sayaka, or that one-eyed idiot that keeps bumbling about with her spear - but I certainly wouldn't have expected it from someone who ascribes to such a cowardly, impersonal way of combat."

Now you're reminded why you hate her again.

How do you reply?

Your jimmies certainly aren't that rustled, but that doesn't certainly close the option of you rustling hers in return for her attempt. It's then that you talk about getting your own golden weapon, a fine specimen of the Magnum Research Mark XIX Desert Eagle. You talk briefly about its specifications, how good it feels in your hand, and how you think you could accurately put one of its .50 Action Express rounds into the ass of a flea from 200 meters away. You could hear her growling underneath her breath and trying to interrupt you after every paragraph or so, but you gamely forge on, cutting her off and continuing in your tirade.

It's only after you mention a certain pink-haired girl with black eyes that she falls silent. After a few moments, she speaks again.

"I don't feel comfortable talking about her over the phone, Murderface. Tell you what - there's a bar that serves Chang'aa at this time of day, downtown. Yakuza bar by the name of Tatsumi's, but it's decent. I'll meet you there in one hour."

There's a click as the connection goes dead.

Apparently, Kirika had just asked you out on a date. You know where the bar is, of course. You've tried to drink yourself stupid there before.

You glance at the phone in your hand, then at the golden Desert Eagle in your lap - before you sigh and finally make your decision. This is not how you originally planned to go about with retiring her, but certain developments did come to play that convinced you that this wasn't going to be as simple as waiting in a skyscraper rooftop and pulling the trigger as soon as you had the target in your sights.

Nothing is ever that simple, although you wish they could be.

Levering yourself off of your favorite chair, you immediately call Mami up. She already seems to be up and about, and you hear the voices of children calling her name and generally being kids. You've apparently called her in the middle of her part-time job as a daycare center teacher. You apologize quickly, and tell her about where you're going, and you'll need someone to tag in to watch Iori while you're gone.

"Yes, I'll send Kyoko-chan right over. I'll join her as soon as I'm done with my shift. But...is it really wise, Chiaki-san? You're not exactly at talking terms with Kirika-san..."

You assure her that it's okay. Still, just in case, you make her promise to take care of Iori should anything happen to you.

"Don't say such scary things, Chiaki-san. Whatever it is, you'll pull through. But...I promise."

You thank her and end the call right away. Glancing at Iori, you step towards the window of your apartment as you toss your cellphone onto the seat of your vacated chair - and it's then that you transform, your soul gem sparking into life onto the back of your right hand, a purple diamond gilded in bronze.

The entire apartment rumbles slightly as brief flashes of light explode on your form, your costume manifesting directly onto your body. The familiar weight of your shield a heavy, reassuring presence on your right arm.

The costume's clean and new, just like how it is with every transformation. You wince and fidget a bit - the damn pantyhose that comes with the entire outfit hitching just a bit too high for comfort.

You stash the Desert Eagle and an extra magazine into your inventory. You figure that if things were to turn badly, you could rely on the shield giving you something useful.

You decide that you're well and ready, and make to leave the apartment - when you hear something that you thought you'd never hear in your lifetime.

"Chiaki-san? Where are you going?"

Iori's woken up, it seems. You turn around and stand awkwardly in your magical girl costume as the idol sits up, clutching the futon covers up to her chest.

"O-oh. It's that time already? You have to go to work?" She looks around. "Have...have you had breakfast already? I can cook you something..."

How do you reply? You're on the clock, here.

You say that you've already had breakfast, and if she's hungry, she can either see what Mami left in the fridge or have the agent that's coming along in a few moments to get her something to eat while she's en route. You give her Kyoko's number, partly because you don't want her to leave the apartment to get something to eat, and partly because you're amused of making a delivery girl out of your one-eyed comrade.

"Ah. Alright. Thank you, Chiaki-san." She smiles at you, seemingly grateful that you seem to know what you're doing. "You will be coming home later tonight, right...? I mean, what you're doing right now, it's not that dangerous...?"

She asks you this as you remember to grab some grenades from the case you've stashed at the far corner of the room. You look back at her as you stuff four of the pineapples into your inventory, her eyes widening in concern at the sight of such explosives.

How do you reply? Do you lie to her, or tell the truth?

You're not too sure how to proceed with such a line of questioning. You've never really considered if a certain situation you've been sent into is more dangerous than the other - you tend to deal with things as they go along. It certainly won't be any picnic, and meeting Kirika in a yakuza bar certainly won't be comparable to frolicking in a field of daisies - but you're confident enough with your abilities and considerate enough to be the least bit optimistic with your reply.

You tell her that you'll simply be meeting up with a co-worker to talk about certain work-related things, and that you're pretty sure you'll be coming home later that night, or perhaps early morning the next day. Iori is still concerned, but she seems to be convinced, and asks you to take care.

You briefly wonder about this treatment you're getting from the idol. It's a bit strange, isn't it? She's only met you for barely a day or so, maybe two if you consider yesterday.

You shrug at this and leave, telling her to lock the door behind you and only open it for Kyoko. You catch a cab going to Tatsumi's - you're not too big on public transportation that doesn't let you smoke while you travel. You don't mind paying extra.

The driver drops you off directly in front of the bar. It's a small place, not that glitzy as compared to the other bars you know yakuza frequent. You step inside, and the bartender gruffly greets you. It being barely noon, there are only a handful of people inside, typical yakuza in their loud shirts and talking in equally loud, belligerent tones.

You sit in the bar and very nearly order a double whiskey. You remind yourself that you have to be sober for this.

You order a cold glass of soda instead.

We'll need more than frag grenades to do the trick.

Pack a couple of WP (white phosphorous) grenades if available. Pack an folding stock Saiga-12, with an attached light, spare 20rd mags, alternating high-power slugs and buck. Put these in a case or in the shield for easy retreival. We're looking to shred flesh, not penetration.

Keep a few flashbangs in reserve. Bring smoke grenades if we have NVGs, we can see through the smoke with the NVGs.

Strap 2 Glock 20's to our body, to be quickly drawn. 10mm hollowpoints are alright until we can grab the shotgun. Strap a flashbang and an Obrez on us, use for distraction. Wear a jacket or something.

Don't fucking use the golden gun too much, it could be carrying some magical curse or something.

Make sure we have free flow of automatic weapons from the shield.

For sniping, see if we have an semi-auto rifle in .50bmg or larger in the shield. Gepard GM-6 Lynx is preferred; otherwise use bear-stopping bolt-action rifles.

The bartender seems confused about your choice of drink, but you find it in front of you nonetheless. You nod at the man, before casually giving the place a once-over.

There are six people in Tatsumi's besides you and the bartender. Three are sitting in one booth, two in another, and one on a bar seat, approximately four seats away from you to your left. There's a fire exit at the far corner of the bar, and the door that leads probably to the bar's kitchen or whatever they have behind the wall of liquor bottles. Other than that, there doesn't seem to be much that's off here.

Talking with the yakuza here is probably a bad idea. The three seem to be arguing heatedly about a gambling debt, the second group playing cards, and the guy at the bar with you seems to be busy crying into his beer. You doubt Kirika takes assignments or deals with these sort of people.

You however ask the bartender about Kirika, and he nods, recognizing the name.

"Cute classy girl with the violet eyes? Yeah, she comes around here often. Orders changaa each time. Sophisticated girl like her, I don't know why she wastes her time here." He shrugs as he cleans a glass. "She's alright, except for that sword she keeps on her wherever she goes. I bet it's to stop these yaks from hitting on her. Happens a lot."

Yeah. That's her, alright.

You sip at your soda again when it's then that your shield clicks faintly. Not loud enough for everyone to hear, but it's certainly audible. You glance at it for a moment, before turning back - and it's then that you see Kirika, sitting on the stool next to yours, where she hadn't been a moment ago. Looking as if she'd been there the entire time, leaning forward, her elbows on the bartop. She's wearing casual clothes, you note, and her sword is hanging from a belt loosely tied around her waist.

"Tatsumi-san. My usual, please." She purrs at the bartender, who nods and gets her drink - a tall glass of an evil-smelling liquid that reminds you of jet fuel and nightmares.

"You've got some nerve, really, Murderface, but I suppose that's your one redeeming quality." She says, smiling, but not looking at you. "Now, while we're still being nice to each other, let's cut to the quick. What do you know of the pink-haired girl with the black eyes? Add to that, how did you meet her?"

"Ah. I see. A pity you didn't succeed in doing so, but we can't have everything." She sips her awful-smelling drink delicately, as if it's the finest wine and she's drinking from one of those classy snifters. "Well, it's strange, but I met her the same way. Here, in this bar, while I was having my nightly restorative." She slides the tip of a finger on the rim of her glass, deep in thought. "Eerily beautiful, except for those eyes of hers. I admit I was taken by her a bit. She smells quite nice, too."

She takes another sip of her drink. "She knew my name right off. I tried asking for hers, but she never did give it. She said it was of no consequence." Kirika glances your way, before patting the sword at her side. "She gave me Muramasa after that, and disappeared, just like a ghost. She appears from time to time, and we talk a fair bit."

Well. It's a bit heartening to know that you're not crazy. That someone else is being pestered by the pink-haired bitch.

"Your firearm," Kirika suddenly says, the word making her frown. "May I see it? I'd like to find out if it is the same kind of gold that Muramasa has. If what you're saying is true, then they should be somewhat similar."

Handing over your firearm to the Magical Girl you're supposed to kill. You're on a roll, yes you are. Bad Idea Train, Choo Choo, the last stop is you being lowered to the ground while Iori cries and Kyoko lays claim to all of your alcohol.

You pull the golden Desert Eagle surreptitiously out from your inventory so as not to alarm anyone - the bartender casting you a wary eye but not saying anything about it - and you slide out the magazine, placing it on the bar a slight distance away from Kirika's reach. You pull the slide back, the chambered round flying out (which you immediately catch). You pass the now empty gun to Kirika, who receives it with a surprising amount of reverence and a not-so-surprising amount of disgust.

"Hnh. The tone and texture is certainly similar, and the lustre is definitely the same." It's then that she dips a finger into her drink and rubs the bit of alcohol into that engraved logo on the center of the grip. You smell something burning - and it's as Kirika wipes off the residue that you see a completely new symbol underneath the previous one, carved into the metal.

The roman numeral VIII. Eight.

Immediately, Kirika seems to change subtly at this discovery. A small sad smile on her face, as if disappointed at what had just been confirmed. At the same time, the tension between the two of you feels as if it's increased, somehow. Like something about to happen.

"One and the same, then. Muramasa has the same kind of symbol, although a different number." She gives you back the pistol before pulling up her own sword, thumbing the guard and unsheathing the weapon the smallest bit - and you could see 'XX' hewn into the brilliant golden blade.

That's certainly strange. But how did she find out, you ask?

"The girl with the sunless eyes told me," Kirika murmurs, sipping her drink again. "She also told me that someone with a golden gun bearing the number VIII will be the one to kill me. Coincidentally, the gun you've just shown me has the same exact characteristics."

She continues to sip her drink, calmly.

"The idea of you killing me, however, is laughable. I can't even contemplate it happening in any universe or timeline, with any amount of probability."

It's to note here that she has one hand on her sword, and the other on her drink.

How do you react?

Kirika seems to laugh at this. "Oh, yes, of course. You see why I don't really believe her. You're not the sort, I'm afraid, to actually respect the very notion of ending someone's life by doing it properly and professionally." The raven-haired Magical Girl smiles at you, her eyes hooded. "You kill from a distance, safe from any danger, much too far away to see the life dying out of your victim's eyes or hearing their final words. You don't even see how beautifully they bleed out as they pass from this world to the next." She lets out a sigh. "Honestly, Murderface, I'd like you a lot better if you weren't so proud of being such a filthy degenerate."

She frowns slightly as you offer to give her the firearm - which you've just loaded yourself, the magazine sliding neatly into its slot and clicking firmly into place. "No, no, keep it. Really. I've no interest in it, or the prophecy the girl with the black eyes has for those she gifts these weapons to. I'm not sure if there are any other recipients of these, at that. I hardly care. All I do care about is how finely this one cuts. Nothing else."

You shrug at this, before putting the Desert Eagle back in your inventory. If she says you can keep it, then you are. You're strangely feeling attached to it, in any case.

With your gun put away and her letting go of her sword, the tension seems to be done away with for now. You take out your pack of cigarettes, stick one between your lips, and wordlessly offer Kirika one.

"Ah. Another disgusting habit of yours. Thank you, Murderface, but I don't smoke."

You shrug again, before making to light your cigarette. You hold up your zippo to your face, peering at the reflection on the polished metal - and you swear you could see Pinky behind you, smiling.

You turn around. No one is there.

You turn back around - and it's then that you notice Kirika is gone. You glance around for her, and you see her heading out the door...while the six men who'd been in the bar with you suddenly stand up, drawing guns from inside their coats.

"I don't believe in prophecies, Murderface. I do believe a little blue bird that told me about someone volunteering to retire me."

Six firearms click noisily as they're aimed at you. The bartender is strangely absent.

"You're not going to retire me, Murderface. You're not good enough to." She turns her head, slightly, to grin at you. "Take care of her,gentlemen. You can have what's left."

She disappears, and the Yakuza start to open fire.

Yes. Yes, this is exactly how you planned things to turn out. Fantastic.

You think this was actually a job meant to retire us?
True, Kirika is the Magical Girl best suited to retiring us.
But I don't see the profit in it for QB, unless there's something else about the golden gun and Pinky we don't know about.

How? If she didn't show up to the hit she'd be publicly labeled rogue. So she have to show up, and we have a rifle with a three mile range. There'd be no counter ambush.

Going to the bar was all risk no reward. We know the pink girl wants to kill us already.

Well we actually figured out that Kirika can see Pinky as well, the same pinky as we we do, but doens't really care either way as long as she can carry on with killing.
And she didn't try to chop us apart in melee right ways.

That's two strong pluses.

The first round to be spat out in the ensuing bulletstorm hasn't even made it out of its barrel when you've already vaulted over the bar itself, landing neatly behind it and hunkering down for cover. The perfume of so many high-quality alcohol start to thicken the air - mixing with the scent of gunpowder - as the spray of gunfire above you reduces the entire stock of the bar into nothing but broken glass and fumes. You would have cried at the sight of such folly, had you not rescued a bottle of whiskey a moment before the impromptu firing squad started shooting up the place. You take a leisurely swig from it, before racking your shield twenty degrees counterclockwise, twice - dispensing two grenades into your right hand, the pineapples clinking heavily in anticipation.

You take another swig, before arming the two explosives with a simple tug of their safety rings - and then casually toss them over your shoulder and over the bar. You almost snort whiskey out of your nose as you hear one of the yaks actually curse in pain following a rather nasty cracking sound - one of the grenades must have hit someone in the face. Lucky.

You're already out the back door - the inside of the bar also strangely empty. The bartender must have been warned by Kirika in advance, by the way the back door itself seemed to be ajar. You glance around - the back door leads out to an alley, with a busy road visible at the nearby exit.

You start walking just as the bar behind you explodes in a firey inferno, both grenades detonating at the same time.

Someone ratted you out. You're not surprised of this happening, but you do wonder who did it. You have suspects in mind, but nothing really tangible for now. It could have been the mutant cat for all you know. But what's certain is that Kirika now knows you're out to kill her.

How do you proceed from here?

You hail another cab, and the driver murmurs something about terrorists as he drives you to a location you say out of rote memory. You'll need bigger guns to deal with this, you decide. Two grenades and a Desert Eagle certainly won't be enough for Kirika. For this, you need a little sister's help.

Though Kirika may be a smug asshole who doesn't believe that we can kill her in a million years, we must assume that she has contingencies in place for something like this. She may have already anticipated any moves to use her best friend against her. The question is how to find her now that she's probably not going to take the fake job that QB set up for her.

Another thing we may want to do is to check on Iori and make sure that she's going to be safe so long as Kirika is alive. If she's spooked, she may try to use Iori as a shield or bargaining chip.

You blow Kyuubey an irritated raspberry through the phone, which admittedly loses a bit of its impact simply because 1) he's not hear to see it and 2) it doesn't translate well into cellphone audio, by the way he seems to be confused about it. "I think I'm losing you, Matsuda, you're breaking up. Are you going through a tunnel or...?"

You cut him off by reporting, as curtly and as quickly as you can, that Kirika knew about her impending retirement. You tell him about the altercation that resulted in a bar getting blown up, and six yakuza members presumably being roasted into cinders as you speak. You leave out the thing about the weapons, of course.

"...Impossible. No one was supposed to know, except you. You did receive the dossier personally, didn't you? It can't be the courier, he's explicitly instructed not to open them under any circumstances."

You're silent at this. You didn't...receive the dossier personally, no. It was already there on the side table, with the pancakes Mami made.

A moment more, and Kyuubey lets out a frustrated sigh. "I'll see what I can do from here. In the meantime, I suppose you're headed to that place to rearm? If you need it, you can ask her to back you up. I'll authorize it. In the meantime, I'll send Mami over to your place. Knowing Kirika, she might get it into her head to wait for you there, and you have a principal to take care of."

That's certainly...considerate of the little bastard.

You thank him, and end the call, just as a couple of fire trucks blaze past you, evidently sent to confine the fire you just made.

What do you do next?

That's one of the options / possible explanations.
The other being:
1) Kyoko knew what the other assignemnet was and let katana bitch know because she wants to settle it herself (it's unlikely, but so is Mami ratting us out - she might to exactly like Murderface, but I'm pretty sure she wouldn't betray QB).
2) Pinky did it, she just wants to watch the world burn and she seems to be sort of omnipresent, so she could heave known about the assignment.
3) QB wants one of us retired, doesn'tt really care which one (unlikely, because Kiriko is both way more murderhappy and way less controlable than our humble self, but so are the other scenarions).

You speak quickly and quietly, telling her about how your assignment did overlap with Kirika's, and how the sword-wielding lunatic suddenly went berserk and nearly killed you with her Yakuza friends. You tell her to watch out for Kirika, not to let anyone else in, and not to scare Iori.

"...Alright. Okay. I understand. B-but Mami's already been here, she just stepped out for a second to buy us snacks...wait, she's here right now." A clatter and some static, and you hear Kyoko telling Mami to lock the door and close the windows.

Another burst of static, and Kyoko comes back on. "Place is buttoned up. If she comes around with her party, we'll be ready. H-hey, maybe I should call Sayaka back here, too? She can help, right?"

You open your mouth to answer when an entire meter of solid gold steel punches through the roof, heading straight down, stabbing right into your cellphone as you're holding it. You manage to let go just before it gets skewered, but the edge cuts into your cheek, causing blood to drip down from the superficial cut. You glance upward, the golden desert eagle snapping automatically into your hand, as you hear footsteps on the roof. The driver, an elderly old man, screams at the sight of the blade as it slices through the roof neatly, sawing up and down - and you see Kirika's face peering at you from the gash, grinning the grin the Grim Reaper usually has as a perennial facial expression.

"THE FLESH OF FALLEN ANGELS, MURDERFACE! TASTE IT AND BE FREE! RENDER YOURSELF UNTO HER SERVICE!"

She shrieks down at you, cackling. The sword noisily withdraws, disappearing upwards, before it's stabbed again, downwards, this time right into the driver's skull.

The driver dies with a pathetic death rattle as his hands fall from the steering wheel. The car starting to swerve. With a cackle, Kirika hops off, and she disappears before you could even draw a bead on her.

What do you do?

The car gives a horrible lurch as it goes out of control. Getting knocked around the car, you stash the Desert Eagle back into your inventory before racking your shield a complete 180 degrees - the gears inside crunching loudly, the two remaining jewels sliding open and shining with bright purple light.

A click, and the world stops, cast in a dull iron gray. Immediately, you take hold of the driver's corpse - the color returning to him briefly as you touch him - and you shove him out of the driver side door that you force open with a kick.

He freezes in mid-drop, and you slip in between the passenger and driver seats to replace him. You take a moment to light another cigarette, before closing the door properly and putting on your seatbelt. You take this moment to look around, too - it seems that Kirika has indeed made her getaway.

"She's a fast one. She's out of your hair for now, really." A voice says beside you, preceded by the sweet, floral scent of corruption and decay.

You turn slightly to look at Pinky sitting - no, reclining - on the passenger seat, pulling the seatbelt over her and latching it into place. "Safety first," she giggles.

How do you react?

"So many questions, Homura-chan!" Pinky exclaims, a pair of fetching and expensive-looking shades materializing in her gloved hands. She puts them on carefully, smiling all the while. "I'm afraid I can't answer all of them right now, but what I can tell you is that the golden toys are important. They really really are, so you shouldn't throw them away! It's ideal if you collect as many of them, actually!"

She giggles. "If you do, then I'll give you a special prize! It can be anything you want. Maybe...I can give you your old memories back, if you want them! Anything that I feel like giving, really."

You grumble something about pink-haired idiots, and ask your questions again. A bit more forcefully, this time.

"Yes, yes. Clearly, your best friend has gone crazy. I don't know how, really, but I'm pretty sure it's not the pretty golden letter opener's fault! I mean, it's just a sword, when you get down to it!"

Your shield is starting to grow just a bit warm, its inner gears protesting loudly. You'll have to undo the time stop soon.

"Sounds like our time's up, Homura-chan! Try not to get yourself killed, alright? You have a 50/50 chance of getting the dirt nap you deserve!"

A click, and a loud grinding of gears, and your shield resets itself - the time stop disengaging, taking with it Pinky's existence.

The car screeches as you slam on the brakes, and through some clever (and albeit impromptu countersteering) you manage to pull the car back onto the road. You're still bleeding from your cheek, and your cellphone's been sliced apart, but otherwise you're fine.

You take another puff of your cigarette before punching it towards your rearming safehouse, and your potential backup. At least Iori's safe.

The leak can wait. You have to take care of Kirika first.

Canonically Homura's shield stored an infinite number of items that she could pull out and had a finite supply of magical sand that stopped time.
Once the sand ran out she couldn't stop time any more but that was ok since the nature of her wish meant that she relived the same month near endlessly and each time she restarted her magical sand was full.

She went through the same month that many times she managed to store up enough weapons to kill the population of the world a few dozen times over, a battleship and enough explosives to crack the world in half (roughly)

I don't remember them mentioning it during the series because she was in a time loop where the sand would run out and reset her to the start of things so she could try again.

her wish basically caused her to be kept in a time loop of one month for god knows how long and each time she remembered everything that had happened which started to wear on her because she had failed to help her friends dozens of times over and it caused her to become jaded and almost stop caring about things other than her goal.

In the final loop (the one the series takes place in) she tries killing kyuubey before he can cause the other girls to make contracts

Either way, she probably isn't PLANNING to go rogue, it's just a result of her actions.

That's a pretty good theory, D. Sayaka doesn't like us but she hates Kirika more, doesn't she?

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and someone clearly wants you dead.

You're currently driving a taxi cab with the roof half-torn off by another Magical Girl with a golden pig-sticker, all while rambling about the flesh of fallen angels. You were there in the back seat when she skewered the driver's head through the car roof, and you had to throw his corpse out so that you could grab the wheel and stop the cab from crashing headlong into oncoming traffic.

You could use a drink, but it's probably a good idea to remain sober right now, as you punch it to the nearest safehouse.

You light another cigarette with the smouldering stub gripped between your lips, before you spit said stub out and replace it with the newly-lit one. Burning nearly half of the fresh cigarette with one deep inhalation.

Rearming yourself with much more serious hardware than your golden Desert Eagle and two grenades is of course your priority right now, but you can't help but think back to just what happened. What was supposed to be a relatively calm yet scathing conversation with Kirika Kure in a Yakuza bar resulted in said Yakuza bar being shot up by the yaks themselves, and you having to resolve the situation with two primed grenades. That in itself isn't bad, as your social interactions usually turn out like that in some way or another, but what Kirika said just before she left you to get shot up...it's making you rethink your relationships a bit. What little you have of them, anyway.

You raise a hand and scratch the itchy cut Kirika had scored you on your cheek with - an unlucky wound after she tried to skewer you from above. She managed to skewer your cellphone instead, which is now a pile of useless pink-encased electronics on the back seat. You'll have to requisition another one later, you think to yourself as your fingers come away with bloody flakes. At least the wound's dried and stopped bleeding.

You finally arrive at your destination. It's been exactly an hour and a half since your disastrous date with Kirika Kure, which makes it around early afternoon. You've stopped directly in front of an abandoned-looking warehouse in a lot full of warehouses, just a few ways near the docks. Warehouse #0069, to be exact, clumsily spray-painted onto the rusty sliding doors. You turn off the taxi's engine and step out.

You suppress a smile at the number. Grow up, will you?

You step up to the main doorway and bang the heel of your hand into it a couple of times. You hear the noise echo dully inside, and strangely enough, there doesn't seem to be anything going on beyond the metal gate. Strange, considering that the person you're supposed to meet is known for endlessly tinkering with stuff that's considered far and away more dangerous than firearms. Explosions and other disturbing noises are usually expected.

...Kirika couldn't have gotten to her already, has she?

What do you do?

Reading the setup brought some serious Black Lagoon nostalgia on. As such, I'd like to ask if we're Magical Girl Revy Two Hands or not.

If the answer to that is yes, then obviously it's time to go in guns blazing, as that always seems to work out the best for Revy.

If not, steath. See if there are any grimy windows to peer through, or check for roof access and see if there are any skylights. Batman always lucks out and gets skylights.

Burning through the rest of your cigarette as you glower at the dark, soundless warehouse, you let the smoldering filter fall from your lips before grinding it out with the heel of your shoe. Normally you'd put this strange behavior down to the girl's admittedly quirky personality, but under current circumstances, a bit of paranoia is justified.

You draw the golden Desert Eagle from your inventory and make your way around the warehouse, quietly, looking for any signs of forced entry. The building itself doesn't have a skylight, and what windows you find doesn't seem to be broken. Trying to peer through them doesn't help, as the occupant has them boarded up.

You walk back right where you started, muttering curses under your breath. You'll have to go in the only way through, and you know how well that's going to work out.

Taking a deep breath, you kick the sliding gate open - it takes a few to do so - and you immediately rush in, firearm held with both hands in front of you, ready to shoot.

All you see is darkness - and what looks to be a pair of narrowed crimson slits, blazing with light, at the very center of the unlit warehouse. It's...maybe seven, eight feet off the ground. You hear the deafening whine of machine joints and servos as it turns to face you.

It's then that you hear whatever it is talk - and it sounds like someone roaring into a massive loudspeaker with the bass turned up.

"MURDERFACE. WE MEET AGAIN AT LAST."

It takes one single step, preceded by the chainsaw-pitch whine of its joints, and the entire ground shakes.

You're...well. You have no idea what it is, and you have no memory of pissing off an eight-foot tall robot.

What do you do?

You let out the breath you've been holding and stand a bit more easily, stashing your firearm back into your inventory. You admonish the silhouetted giant in front of you, shaking your head all the while.

You could've shot her, you say.

"But this one was counting on it!" The giant speaks in a completely different voice this time, no longer twisted into a bassy rumble through speaker corruption and more feminine-sounding. "This one was hoping to at least test armor integrity against normal gunfire!" More frustrated grumbling. "Lights on!"

The warehouse lights immediately snap into existence, and for a moment you shield your eyes at the sudden harsh illumination from the lamps above. As your eyes adjust, you realize that you've been talking to a gargantuan being in armor - its large shoulderpads nearly forming 70% of its massive bulk, with the rest formed by tree trunk-like legs and arms twice as thick, ending in clawed fists. Its snouted face with the slitted crimson eyes reminding you of some sort of robot elephant, with tusks growing on either side of its maws. Painted in terrifying black and covered in bronze symbols and skulls...you're not sure what to think of it.

It's then that pressure seals around the grotesque helmet hiss out, and is lifted up and over by two gloved hands sprouting out from the hole it's been covering. The helm falls to the ground in a heavy thunk, and from its vacated spot, you see a familiar brown-haired girl with sleepy umber eyes.

She smiles at you like a pleasant dream.

"Murderface! You have not visited this one for a while! Look, I have almost restored full functionality on this suit of armor you took out from your shield!"

Ah. Yes, you remember now. You were trying out what else you could pull out of your shield, once, and instead of a firearm, it gave you a large metal container fifteen feet wide and just as tall. The container had strange symbols inscribed upon it, and it crushed a nearby car underneath its weight.

You gave it to this girl to investigate. Turned out to be mobile power armor of some sort, and she's been hard at work at making it battle-ready for you ever since.

You forgot what her real name actually was, but she likes to be called Misaka for some reason.

"So! This one has been called by our favorite boss! You are having trouble with Kirika-san, yes? Need better hardware, yes?" She says as the front of the armor opens at the chest, and you see her scrunched up into a sitting position, her arms and legs clamped tight with machinery. Probably the controls for the limbs and such. With clicks and hisses, she unlatches herself from the interface and hops out, wearing her usual work clothes - a blue mechanic's jumpsuit, with grease stains here and there. "Just tell this one what you need, and she will supply you! "

Well, if you say it like that...

What do you ask her to get for you? You can ask her for two long firearms and one extra sidearm. Grenades and explosives should be alright.

A Shotgun just in case, I'm thinking an AA-12.

A sniper rifle in a high caliber, I'm not too picky on this one though I'd like an Arctic Warfare.

For a sidearm an Obrez would be fun. But we might want something more versatile and go for a glock or a machine pistol.

Definitely a sniper rifle of some sort, maybe something as big as a barrett, designed for cutting through armor and the like, with some x-ray/infra goggles or something. Honestly, I think our initial plan of sniping her off the tower wouldn't have worked since she's too freaking fast, but if we can nail her through a wall she wouldn't see that coming. Then for back-up, SMG sounds alright, AA-12 also might be an idea for full on bullet spray. Oh, and if we don't want to use the golden DEagle, we do need another handgun.

You give her what you think sounds like a nice list of tools that might be able to give Kirika pause, and Misaka's eyes light up as you rattle off the list. In contrast to the katana-wiedling psycho killer, you've always agreed with the arms dealer-slash-tinkerer - she not only adores the gun and all of its permutations, but reveres it to the point of worship, sometimes. You've heard her gush about how this triggering mechanism is so sublime that it's comparable to making love, and how the sight of a properly field-stripped AK-47 is enough to send her into paroxysms of delight.

...You hang out with the strangest people.

"Yes, yes, something long range! Something that strikes from afar, so far that Kirika-san would not be able to figure out where the round that reduces her face into goulash came from! Haha! Oh, have waited for long time for this!"

You also remember that Kirika's earned the ire of Misaka once or twice. One of the times being Kirika slashing a particularly-cherished piece of the arms dealer's into pieces - an antique Chicago Typewriter that Misaka had spent three month's salary on.

Needless to say, Misaka was livid then.

"Ah! Just the thing!" The brown-haired girl scrambles toward what you see is a pile of large instrument carrying cases - cellos, guitars, the sort you need two hands to carry around - and she pulls out from the pile a rather underwhelming clarinet case, four feet long, two feet high, and around half a foot thick. It looks undersized, even.

"Anzio 20mm Takedown Rifle! Misaka just received it from great land of Americas! Customized it a bit so recoil is not so much!" She grins as she tosses the case at you, and you are nearly knocked down by how heavy it is. Well, you weren't expecting it to be that heavy. "Is disassembled, but is easy to put together! Misaka has incendiary rounds prepared for that, too, so is okay!"

Well, you know how to put a rifle together, so you can manage with that at least. You watch as Misaka gets you the rest of the things you requested - an FN P90 with three extra magazines, and four flashbangs and grenades each.

"Ah, of course, there is question of backup," Misaka says as she piles your equipment into your arms, a thoughtful expression on her face. "Kyuubey-san says is not really compulsory, but if Murderface wants, Misaka can come along and take up sniper duty. Murderface can then engage Kirika-san up-close, lure her into kill-zone, and then Misaka will take the shot!"

To explain further, in railgun, there is one thousand of Misaka's sharing a hivemind with a loli queen at the top. They are good to do calculations, have very mild electricity power, good with technology, speak of themselves at the third persons, and act as world-wide spy, even though they don't know that.

Do we know how good a shot Misaka is, if she's damn good than go for it, we ought to be able to slow Kirika down a bit by the time we get to the kill-zone, enough that she can turn her entire torso into a fine mist.

Since we're not lugging around a fucking anti-material rifle we should be able to bring the AA-12 or a similar automatic shotgun with.

We have time stop.

But I have a cunning plan. We lure Kirika in an maze-like plaza. The plaza is packed with upwards-facing Claymores. Mikasa is hidden far away on machinegun duty.

We are the lure. When Kirika appears, she gets sprayed with Hitler's buzzsaw while we try to shoot her too. She's distracted, then the plaza explodes while she's busy dodging bullets and not the claymores.

You consider her suggestion for a moment, before nodding. You might as well get her help to even things out. While you certainly prefer working alone, there's definitely some merit to having the best sniper in Kyuubey's agency giving you overwatch. Taking Kirika out on your own is certainly attractive, but as there's quite the high risk of having a meter or so of gold steel shoved into your spine, you'd need all the help you can get..

She takes the rifle off your hands, as she'll be the one in sniper duty. Misaka then rummages a bit more in the overstocked warehouse for a fitting replacement for your arsenal, when you bring up the idea of setting up a claymore trap or two for Kirika. She blinks at this, and nods.

"Well, Misaka has considered that too. Kirika-san is very fast, and has time dilation, yes? Luring her into claymore trap will be challenging a bit. She is very canny, that one, and she will not enter any place that she knows would be rigged - unless, of course, we have really good lure." She shrugs. "Is attractive plan, though! Misaka has enough claymores to start war!"

Your tinkerer friend has a good point. Even in her crazed state, right now, Kirika has excellent nerves - you could call her the most paranoid of the agency if you weren't trying to get that title for your own, too.

"Misaka does not think Kirika-san will just enter plaza like that with sole purpose of hunting Murderface. But...is Murderface suggesting we use Kirika-san's friend as lure?" Misaka puts on her own night vision goggles, three slits of green light replacing her glowing brown eyes. "Kidnapping is reprehensible, Misaka admonishes."

Kidnapping has always been an option, but it's not something you'd really entertain unless it was needed. Mikuni Oriko...even if she was friends with Kirika, you're loathe to involve a civilian in Magical Girl business.

It's then that a beeping sound cuts the silence, and Misaka blinks as she rummages in her pockets, pulling out a battered analog model. She holds it up to her ear, and pales immediately at what she hears.

"Is Kyuubey," She says. "Calling Misaka just in case you are here, already. Says that Kirika did attack Murderface's apartment. Kirika-san...Kirika-san took Mami-san."

She probably wants me, too. I'll call her from one of our locations known that's her. It'll a trap for her if she investigates. Track down Kirika and Oriko when I make the call."

Rig the location to be watched and with claymores, Kirika's likely to look for us. Never mention to Kirika we found out how she found our apartment.

It's likely Krika's trying to turn Miami into some Valkyr shit, flesh of fallen angels, whatever. We have to get her back before that happens.

If we find her, we use Oriko as a bargaining chip if Kirika doesn't want us.

Ask Kyoko if we still have the captured soul gem in the glass of whiskey in our apartment. Kyoko is to hide Iori somewhere unknown, don't call directly, Kirika can trace calls.

possible reasons:
1) Wants to use her to lure us into melee (maybe because she had another Pinky visit and now takes collecting golden weapons seriously).
2) Wants to also get her into whatever stuff she's taking herself.
3) Mami was the rat and this is just the way to get out of suspicion.

"Yes, in fact." There seems to be a bit of hesitation in Kyuubey's voice as he continues. "I got the call from Kirika herself after Kyoko's. She wants you to meet her alone in Mitakihara Tower One's Helipad. Something about finally settling a very old score between the both of you. Mami will be with her, no doubt as a lure."

The Incubator clears his throat. "Now, I'm not too sure how you're going to handle this, Matsuda, but I will impress upon you that Mami Tomoe is an important part of this agency. If you can, please try to ensure her safety. As for Kirika, your assignment still stands. She needs to be retired, and the actions she's taken thus far should prove that it's justified."

Yes. Of course. Consider your ass covered, you bastard mutant cat.

"I've asked Sayaka to get to your place and provide overwatch just in case Kirika tries anything else. I would also suggest not involving Mikuni Oriko in this situation - she'd probably just complicate things at this point, and you don't want another civilian getting caught up in this."

Misaka interrupts your conversation by raising what appears to be an AA-12 Shotgun and two of its drum magazines. You nod at her and turn away slightly, missing the arms dealer's gleeful grin as she lovingly rubs the gun's barrel on her cheek.

"I'll leave you to your plans, then, Matsuda. In the meantime I'll see what I can do about this leak. Good luck, and good hunting."

This wasn't the way you envisioned things to go at all.

MG's bodies are supposed to regenerate, right?
Then, the very moment we're in her sight, Kirika is going to go full berserk on us, disregarding the bullets and slashing us in half.
Her gimmick is also time so I'm not sure If timestop is going to work. I guess It will end up in bloody mess, with both girls trying to hit enemy's soulgem.

I see several problems with the corpse explosion trick, most noticeably the fact that since Kirika can slow down time, and our new body wouldn't have access to our old body's time stop shield, as soon as we grabbed the Soul Gem to throw it to safety, Kirika would slow down time and cut our Soul Gem in half.
Also, the amount of explosive required to destroy Kirika's Soul Gem will also be enough to destroy ours as well, so the Claymore Trick won't work, nor the idea of throwing our Soul Gem to safety; throwing a Soul Gem over the railing of the 60th floor of a skyscraper is not conducive to its survival.

You give Misaka her cellphone back just as you take the AA-12 and both its ammo drums off of her hands. You tell her to call Sayaka and have her meet the both of you on the way to Mitakihara Tower One. You figure Kyoko would be enough to secure Iori - and at the very least, you'll be able to get a few last-minute pointers from the agency's sword expert.

Misaka eagerly obeys as you do your best to cram the fully-automatic shotgun and the spare ammo into your inventory. You glance at the now-deactivated suit of armor in the middle of the warehouse, and you ask Misaka if it's at all serviceable now.

"Ah, no, will not be for a few more weeks, or so," Misaka replies as she pulls her phone away from her ear - and you could faintly hear Sayaka spitting out some of the foulest language you've ever heard her say. Probably didn't like the fact that she was going along for the ride. "Still have to scrub systems and hook up armaments! On its own, still useless!"

You let out a sigh. Could've been handy, but you have to make do with what you've got.

You're ten minutes into the hour before you're supposed to confront Kirika on top of the Helipad as you and Misaka finally make your way out of the warehouse. The arms dealer replacing the fallen helm onto the suit of armor and giving it a small kiss goodbye as she does so. Both of you pile into the taxi cab you've procured, and Misaka secures her seatbelt just as she cuddles the case containing the Anzio to her chest.

"Is adventure! Misaka cannot wait to shoot people!"

You hang out with the strangest people, but they sure can be nice even when they're weird.

You start up the car and peel off back into the main road.

As she kicks the back of your seat again, it's then that you realize that no glib reply or deadpan snap will get her to stop. You're already not in the best of moods with how badly your conversation with Kirika at the bar went - now with a possible mole in your agency AND one of the few friends you have left in this godforsaken world in mortal danger, you are dangerously close to snapping.

You stomp hard on the brakes - causing Misaka to squeal in alarm, clutching the Anzio's case to her tightly, and Sayaka to hit the head rest of your seat with her face, getting some choice expletives out from the blue-haired girl - and it's then that you storm out of the beaten-up cab. It takes you only a split second to throw the passenger door open and grab Sayaka by the brooch securing her cape around her neck. It takes another to tug her out of the car and onto the sidewalk.

"A-ah, Murderface, Sayaka-san, maybe this is not the time--" Misaka calls hesitantly, feebly.

You interrupt her by asking Sayaka through gritted teeth - the frustration welling over and clearly evident in your face, the most emotion you've displayed ever since you realized Iori was staying with you for two months - how she found out about the exact details of Kirika's retirement.

She looks up defiantly at you, then at the gun pointed right at her face, and a small drop of sweat makes its way down her cheek. She remains silent.

You continue by telling her that in no uncertain terms are you more than willing to pull the trigger and decorate the sidewalk with her brains if she does not tell you posthaste. Misaka tries to dissuade you again, clearly disturbed at how this fragile camaraderie between Magical Girls is already falling apart - when Sayaka's eyes widen up at you.

Holster golden desert eagle, tie it down if we have to, and use the another gun. Pull something out of the shield, anything is better than the deagle.

Why are we always using it anyway?

"Fucked if I know." Gesture pointedly with a gun that is NOT the deagle. "Better now? Right, who the fuck said I was going after Kirika?"

Kyoko actually doesn't seem to hate us or at least she seems to keep it pretty well under wraps. So is it that Sayaka hates us because of personality clashes or is it that she thinks we are a threat to her relationship with her girlfriend and Mami?

You blink at this sudden revelation from Sayaka, and you slowly pull the gun from her forehead - before lifting the firearm itself up to your face, peering at your own reflection on the Desert Eagle's polished slide.

Your face is a bit distorted, but there's no mistaking it - your eyes have been getting darker. Not just the iris itself - which you had always seen as light purple - but the sclera, too. Sinking slowly into a uniform black, just like Kirika's.

You blink, and it's then that you see your eyes go back to their normal color. As if the change had never happened.

You turn away from Sayaka as you shove the golden Desert Eagle back into your inventory. You then lift up your now slightly-shaky hand and cover your own eyes with it, trying to calm yourself down. Taking slow, deep breaths.

You're not turning into a monster.

You are not cut out for that kind of psycho bullshit.

She thought she could help you with your assignment. Didn't know it was a retirement one, and she panicked." She shakes her head.

"Called me up right away and asks what to do. Says she doesn't want either of you killing each other. Mami...you know how she is, right? She likes everybody. She likes you, most of all, although I can't even fathom WHY." Sayaka shoots you a dirty look as she gets back to her feet. "She has a history with Kirika too, long before we found your ass in that Witch's Barrier. She thought that if she could tell Kirika beforehand and convince her to get away, maybe you won't pursue her, and no one gets hurt."

The blue-haired girl smiles sadly at this. "Obviously wasn't counting on you - and her - being so fucked up that you couldn't let it go. Now all this has happened, and you'll have to forgive me if I say that it's still your own fucking fault, Murderface."

We need to get Mami quickly and safely away from Krikirwhatsherface. Despite all of the general bitchiness between us and Sayaka, we can agree on that much at least. To do this, we need to initiate the first omen of the End Times and put aside our differences and work together; propose a (temporary) truce with Sayaka for this purpose.

We need to go over the plan with her anyway and see where she fits in with all of this. If she can offer any insight on Kirika or what she might be doing with Mami or how we could better execute this plan, that would be a good step forward.

You let your hand drop from your face, letting out a sigh as you digest what Sayaka had just said. Taking one of the Grief Seeds that Kyuubey had given you in payment for protecting Iori, you press the black thorny bauble against your own Soul Gem, purging the inky darkness already roiling inside the jewel. You replace the Grief Seed back into your Inventory - Kyuubey will want to get it afterwards.

So it was Mami, all along. You weren't expecting it, but at the back of your mind, you knew she was the only one who could've done it. Because she was that nice, that uncorrupted, that kind - that believing of the good in other people. Believing in you to let Kirika go. Believing in Kirika to simply leave the city and never come back.

You'll have to set her expectations of you straight after you rescue her from Kirika.

You turn around slowly and apologize to Sayaka, who blinks in complete surprise and shock at the entire thing. You shock her even further when you suggest a truce between the both of you, at least for now; about how you and her have to work together and get Mami. You'll sort out the details of just what happened later - right now the three of you have a crazy Magical Girl to kill, and the nicest person in your pathetic little lives to save.

Sayaka narrows her eyes at you, as if suspecting a trick of some sort, but shrugs. "S-sure, I guess. If Mami's going to be saved, then I'm in." It's then that she grins. "At the very least, it'll give me some practice for the time when I have to retire you."

That's a very good joke. You laugh at it as the both of you go back into the cab. Misaka seems to be relieved that everything is settled.

How do you proceed now? You have thirty minutes until the meeting takes place.

Kirika is paranoid and prideful, and an absolute monster in CQC. Our timestop may not even fully stop her, just slow her to manageable speeds.

Since she's meeting us at the helipad and has Yakuza goons helping her out, we must assume that she's going to have every perspective sniper place crawling with them. Or that she has even hired snipers of her own to prevent interference with a one-on-one duel with Chiaki. Misaka may have other clones to take her place if she gets gooked, but Sayaka has just one life. I'm not sure if either of them can deal with sniper fire from the rooftops of all the other buildings. She may even keep Mami close to prevent us from using lots of explosives.

As you take the long way to Mitakihara Tower One - trying not to look as conspicuous as three girls in a cab with its roof nearly shorn off - you try to come up with an impromptu plan with both Misaka and Sayaka and how to approach the meeting.

"We go with original plan this one suggested earlier at warehouse, yes?" Misaka pipes up, raising her goggles off her face and onto her forehead to look at you directly. "Drop me off in adjacent skyscraper, probably two or three blocks away, with clear line of sight. Sayaka-san here will be my spotter and guard in case we are detected. Murderface will be lure - you keep Kirika-san busy and preferably stationary! Just give this one three seconds, will ventilate her good!"

"Nice plan, except for Murderface being the lure part." Sayaka scoffs. "Let's face it, you won't last two seconds with Kirika. Your best bet is to clinch and lock up with her somehow, or stun her long enough for nerd here to take the shot."

You remind Sayaka mildly of Misaka's name.

"...Fine. Misaka it is, Murderface."

You let out a sigh. You ask Sayaka, then, if she has any advice for you.

"For you?" The blue-haired girl blinks, before laughing and taking out a sword from her cape - and tossing it on the cab's dashboard. "I'd say shove this into your gut and spare Kirika the trouble. But as we're working to save Mami here..." She narrows her eyes. "...Watch out when she puts her left foot forward. She wears her sword at her left, right?" Sayaka mimes gripping a sword by her waist. "That's when she'll do her charging move. It'll only last a second, she doesn't telegraph her moves that much, but when you see that, get ready to fucking jump out of the way. Don't even try to block it or anything."

You blink and thank her for that tip, while Misaka seems to hop up and down as you pass by a particularly tall skyscraper - one that is two blocks away from Mitakihara Tower One. "Here! Here! This is good spot! This is good nest! Drop off Misaka and Sayaka-san here!"

You glance at Sayaka, and she shrugs. "This is good as place as any. This is kind of the tallest, I think. If you want her as overwatch, then she'll have the best seat in the house."

You nod, and kill the engine as all three of you step out. Misaka seems to be really eager at the prospect of setting up the Anzio, bouncing up and down on the balls of her feet as Sayaka lazily stretches her arms. You take off your glasses and polish them on the hem of your costume, putting them back on as you're satisfied.

It's then that Misaka hands the both of you headsets. "Ah, before Misaka forgets! Communications, for all three of us! Well, Misaka already has hers here--" She taps her goggles. "--so is for your benefit! Put them on!"

The both of you do so, and test them, murmuring expletives to each other quietly.

Yeah, they're good. You thank Misaka.

"Misaka will establish overwatch at top floor! Sayaka-san, hurry!" The arms dealer squeals as she runs towards the entrance of the building, and you see Sayaka sigh before shaking her head.

"Nerds." She says, before turning towards you. "You'll be alright, then, Murderface?"

You're quiet for a moment, before nodding.

"Not that I give a shit about you, of course." Sayaka smiles thinly. "But let's go save Mami." She holds out her hand to you.

You return the smile, and reach out with your free hand - clasping Sayaka by the wrist, as she does yours.

You both let go after a moment before turning your backs on each other. Sayaka following Misaka up into the building, and you making your way towards Tower One on foot.

"The flesh of fallen angels," You find yourself murmuring.

Power armour is pushing it though, you guys seem to enjoy your /k/ moments and Homu does like her arsenal, but it sort of detracts from the theme.

I remember giving up around the time Nanoha got her age changed to 14 in order to be less creepy doing a crush plot with her.

Back then I suggested in one of the discussion threads that the way we were going and the connection the quest had to the Editor setting you were all angling for a Supernaturally Unbalanced Entity position as basically everything goes your way and people act out of character to couple up with you (keeping in mind the series he's on keeps the harem dynamic working by constantly using him as the butt of every joke and keeping up his bad luck).

From what I've head the quest is actually going in that direction and I might have been right all along or Landing Gear has more self respect then most of the quests 'fans' do and used it to fuck with everyone.

Eitherway, the thing I came to dislike most about MSQ isn't so much Landing Gear, who the way he goes through with everyone;s wish fulfilment is bad. Rather, I came to dislike the regulars who try and excuse their creepy collection of anime waifus and how the harem is totally sustainable and reasonable somehow ignoring traditional harem show logic.

But whatever, that's MSQ, it's a mess. This is Magic Girl Noir, all I need is a heavy Noir theme, looking after the blonde dame is fine and good so long as we're monologuing, hard boiled meguca with almost nothing to lose and a eye for professionalism. Keep that shit and I'll be happy.

There's no harm in a little waifu chatter, so long as it stays on a player level, not the character level.

>> ☐ Anonymous 07/02/12(Mon)19:04 No.19714452

I would be okay with this. Minase Iori strikes me as a Nurturer-type, much like Mami. She hates seeing people suffer (remember her raped friend Yayoi?) and she's attracted to Chiaki for two reasons: 1) we saved her life; 2) she thinks she can make Chiaki better.

I don't know if a Nurturing lover is capable of fixing Chiaki, but it could benefit her and it would almost certainly prevent her from going too far over the edge. If they hadn't gotten into their respective fields of Idol and Magical Girl, Iori and Mami probably would've ended up being doctors, nurses, or daycare workers.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 07/03/12(Tue)07:37 No.19721538

You are a Magical Girl.

And as you glance at your own pathetic reflection on the brushed metal walls of the Mitakihara Tower One elevator - you realize that you are slowly going insane.

It's a bit ironic, in a way. You'd always thought all the drinking and painkiller abuse would do you in, finally send you over the brink. All those chemicals and alcohol, burning out synapses, nerves and brain cells, combined with a terminal sleep debt that you only pay by installments - or whenever your body just shuts down and refuses to move. The hallucinations you've learned to tolerate, until one of them started talking back, smiling with dead eyes, bearing golden gifts that drove their recipients bloodthirsty and hungry for flesh.

You're in bad shape, and it could only get worse from here. Whatever god or deity that picks up dead Magical Girls after they've kicked the bucket is going to have an awful start to their workweek when you finally expire. Closed casket burial only - you don't want your friends, what few of them are left, to turn away in disgust at your funeral.

You let out a sigh. You've never really considered that something like this would happen. If you did, you'd probably have turned the gun on yourself a long time ago.

Of course, that's only if you had the guts to pull the trigger in the first place.

30, 31, 32. The electronic floor display ticking away the floors as you ascend. The elevator is taking its own sweet time, but you're not exactly worried.

It's already rapidly approaching sunset. You've lost count of the hours, but it's been definitely four or five hours since this all started. Assigned to kill a fellow Magical Girl that's been declared as a liability, you decided to talk to them, in person, at a place of their choosing. That turned out just as well as you'd hoped. A secondary murder attempt and a haphazard rearming later, you find out that your target has taken someone close to you - someone who, while you were asleep, told your would-be murderer that you were gunning for her.

And now you're here, to carry out what you've been told to do. A decommission. A retirement. Fancy-sounding words for an ugly job. Sure, you hated the person you're going to do it to, but it never fails to leave a bad taste in your mouth.

Because one day, it will happen to you. Not a question of if, but when, and who is sent after you.

Despite the fact that you're currently in a fiberglass-and-steel vertical tunnel heading to the roof of a skyscraper in ear-popping altitudes, you hear the faint chatter of both Sayaka and Misaka, in the building a couple of blocks away from the one you're in. They don't seem to be encountering any resistance, and you hear Sayaka cheerfully introduce Misaka as her younger sister. Cover story, probably. That's the thing you admire most about Sayaka - she can act like no one's business.

58, 59, 60. You feel the elevator slowly come to a halt as it reaches the top floor - the floor where the helipad should be. And if you played your cards right today, the place where a Magical Girl finally dies. You or Kirika, you're not particularly concerned who at the moment.

One of you. It's just the way it has to be.

You step out into the Helipad, your heels making sharp noises on the hard tarmac. You immediately see two people, right at the very center of the pad itself: Mami, bloodied but standing, a firm and resolute expression on her tearful face; and Kirika, behind her, arms crossed, a small smile on her face, pleased at some personal joke.

"Salutations, Murderface." She calls as you approach. "It's nice of you to join us."

How do you respond? How do you react?

Keep our grip tight on the weapon and step forward, ready to meet our foe. We need to trust now that Misaka and Sayaka will be in position and ready to do their part when the opening comes. It's our job to create that opening. Kirika will be ready for us, so we should expect to be at the disadvantage. However, it's very possible that Kirika, given her particular contempt for us and our style of fighting, will indulge in some self-serving monologuing before attacking. We should draw it out as long as possible to give Misaka time to set up her shot.

Walk out cautiously and purposefully, and assess our surroundings as quickly as possible. We need to know exactly where and how to maneuver Kirika so that there won't be any obstruction between her cranium and the armor-piercing round coming to greet it.

You step forward, slowly, deliberately, the Desert Eagle glinting heavily in your left hand as you make your way over to them - stopping just ten paces away from Mami, and twelve paces from Kirika. You realize with a small smile on your face that you could, in one moment, shoot the both of them before they could react. The range is short enough that their skulls will be pulped with the impact, their faces rendered unrecognizable.

Mami is the first to speak, and when she does, she is pleading. Begging.

"Chiaki-san, please."

Her voice is quivering as she begs you to do the impossible.

"You don't have to do this. L-let Kirika-san go, please. She won't hurt anyone else. Just let her go - Kyuubey doesn't need to know. He won't find out. He'll never find out. I'll...I'll take full responsibility for it! No one has to die here, Chiaki-san! Please! Let Kirika go! For me!"

The Desert Eagle seems to twitch in your grasp. Or is it your own hand twitching?

"Give it up, Mami-chan. It's impossible." Kirika says from behind the blonde, smiling her shark's smile. "Do you think she'll actually listen? We don't know if she's even sober enough to actually comprehend what you're saying. Look at her." She gestures to you. "She probably doesn't even know where she is, right now. Do you really think someone like her could understand?"

"N-no," Mami murmurs, seemingly rooted to the spot, unable to turn towards Kirika. "I...I trust Chiaki-san. With my life. She'll listen to me..."

You watch this play out in silence, before murmuring quietly into your headset's microphone.

"Misaka is ready," You hear the arms dealer whisper, a tinny voice in your ear. "Misaka has Kirika in her sights, but Mami-san is too close. You have to get her away from Kirika-san..."

A crackle. "Jesus Christ, Murderface. You should see how big this goddamn thing is. It's--"

"Chiaki-san? Are you listening?" Mami is crying now. "I...I told Kirika. I told her when I saw your dossier. I didn't want to lose either of you, and...j-just please, let her go. She's not going to bother anyone else. Please..."

"Kill them." Another voice, a third voice, whispers in your ear, hissing like a snake. "Kill them, Homura-chan. Make this easier on yourself. Kill them both."

You're not sure if it's Pinky, or just your imagination, picking out words in the static. Either way...

How do you proceed?

You glance down at the Desert Eagle in your hand. You're gripping it tightly enough for the grip's texture to imprint itself onto your palm, tight enough for your knuckles to burn white with the strain. Your index finger impatiently tapping against the trigger, like a persistent spasm.

You close your eyes briefly.

One by one, you feel your fingers uncurling from the grip. Each one relaxing.

Nothing is compelling you to hold it, you tell yourself. Nothing. No one. Not even the pink-haired girl from your nightmares.

You open your eyes as you hear the dull thud - followed by a sharp clatter - as the Desert Eagle falls from your hand.

"Murderface, did you just--" You hear Sayaka snap at you from your headset.

"I can't."

It's the first words you utter ever since you've stepped into this nightmare. You are slightly horrified to hear how dry your throat is, and how gravelly your voice sounds like in this eerie silence. Mami blinks at you, eyes widening, tears streaking down her cheeks as you refuse her the one thing you cannot give her. You would give everything else for her, you know - just as she would have.

"Why?" Is all she asks, tearful, heartbroken. Disappointed in you. As if you could have said anything else. As if you could have been anything else than worthless.

You could answer her. You could convince her. That her friend behind her is unstable, a danger to herself and others. She is unpredictable, a maniac psycho-killer that kills as easily as she breathes. She does not care who she kills, so long as she does. Being paid for it is a bonus.

You could make that case against Kirika.

Knowing full well, of course, that you've made that same case against yourself, too.

"I told you, Mami-chan." Kirika's smile grows wider. "See? She refuses, but she can't tell you why. Why so, indeed? Is it simply your dedication to your job, Murderface - or Chiaki Matsuda, whatever the hell you call yourself now? Is it loyalty to the Incubator, who sends girls to do his own dirty work for him?" Kirika one-handedly draws her weapon - a brilliant, shining blade of gold, gleaming where the dying sunlight hits it. "Or is it simply because you cannot bear to let someone like yourself live and have her own happy ending? Like some sort of misguided penance, like you don't deserve it."

Kirika cackles at this. In a voice not entirely of her own. A harsh, grating cackle, not at all like her smooth, dulcet tones.

"No. No, I don't...no, Chiaki-san. You wouldn't do that." Mami shakes her head weakly. "I know you. You're...you're better than this! Just let her go, please--"

Mami's eyes grow wide, suddenly, as a brilliant crimson lower erupts right in the middle of her chest. A sliver of golden light stabbing forth from the rapidly-expanding flower of blood, piercing her uniform's ribbon at the very center, undoing it, letting the length of yellow cloth fall downwards.

"C-Chiaki...san..."

There's a liquid sound - and blood hissing as it splatters on the hot tarmac - as Kirika tears her sword away from Mami, the sunlight on the blade turning the bloodstains an ugly black. Mami's own form jerks back at the sudden movement, before crumpling into the floor, limp, a puppet with its strings cut.

"No more babbling." Kirika laughs as she licks Mami's blood from the sword. "Come on, Murderface. Time for that retirement."

Your entire being screams at you to pick up your gun. This you ignore.

You're much too angry for that, now.

The loaded AA-12's bulk falls heavily in your hands just as Kirika charges you.

What do you do?

The shield on your arm - the device that stops time itself around you - is behaving strangely. It's clicking, as always, and you feel it grow warmer with each passing second - but there's something strange in the way it clicks. Like the gears are catching against something, unable to function.

You'd have thought this strange, of course, if you weren't busy at the moment, snarling an oath at the cackling, black-garbed form of Kirika Kure as you roll to the side to dodge her just as she comes charging past - and it's then, on one knee, you start unloading at her general direction. Pulling the trigger far enough and hard enough that you're pressing it into the grip.

The first shot takes Kirika by complete surprise as it slams right into her back, tearing into her uniform, tearing into flesh, and blasting her across the helipad. She manages to right herself in mid-air a split-second after, and you're shown just how quick and slippery the cackling bitch can get with her time dilation ability as you try to track her, firing all the while.

It's difficult. She phases out of reality one moment, phasing in the next. Like an animation with some of its frames missing in between, her motion is incomplete, jumping and then landing in two places while being non-existent in between.It's her time dilation ability, working to her favor. Kirika is not giving you any time to activate your Time Stop, either - she's sticking close to you, making you move, making you dodge, making you react instantly just as you strive to blast her full of holes. She cackles as she hears your drum magazine click empty, and you curse as you let it drop and shove the other one in.

You roll to the side once more as she lunges toward you in mid-reload, barely dodging a golden pig-sticker aiming to seperate your head from your shoulders. You scramble to your feet, desperate to increase the distance between the both of you. Kirika laughs again, a demon's laugh, as she saunters slowly toward your direction.

Her eyes shining wetly with black, tarry blood.

"I have tasted the flesh of fallen angels, Murderface." She grins, licking her bloody teeth. "I've tasted the Devil's sweet blood. It runs in my veins."

She steps over Mami's prone body, on top of the puddle of scarlet expanding underneath the girl who smiled at you and baked you pancakes whenever you asked her to.

"I've seen beyond the world of skin and flesh, the architecture of blood and bone marrow. Death...death is coming, Murderface, and hell follows with her."

Shut up, you scream at her. Shut up, you crazy, murdering bitch. The words have barely left your own lips as you raise your shotgun again, intent on ventilating her - when you feel a horrifically cold sensation on your right arm.

You look down, and realize you don't have a right arm anymore. Cut neatly above the elbow, your shield clattering on the ground. Joining your dismembered limb on the tarmac, your soul gem still firmly planted on the back of your hand.

"This is the twilight winter, Murderface. I am ready to be her herald." Kirika's voice is the only thing you can hear now, above your own pounding heartbeat. "Her time is now, and all who stands in her way...must die."

You find yourself being strangely calm and peaceful as you continue to bleed out on the tarmac. The Golden Desert Eagle still calling out to you, begging you to use it, to save yourself.

You ignore it. It's not worth it, not even now.

You're still angry, of course. You're still angry at just how badly you've screwed this one up. You're angry that an uppity little bitch like Kirika Kure managed to get the better of you, even spouting that crazy monkey talk direct from your nightmares. You're angry that you let a hallucination get under your skin, making you doubt the very skills that have seen you through worse. And more, still, you're angry at yourself for letting Mami get hurt.

Gritting your teeth, you lean forward, grinding your forehead into the hot tarmac, using it to support you as you reach back for the combat knife strapped to your ankle.

Funnily enough, it seems that Kirika has walked around you to face your front. Gloating long enough to mistake your awkward last attempts at setting things right for abasing yourself to her, to beg for mercy.

"No need for that, Murderface. I'm not in the business of granting you any." Kirika licks her teeth again, a rasping noise. "But I've always thought that groveling fits you."

You have ten seconds of consciousness left.

You only need three.

The first is for you to spring forward with the last of what you have left. Your heels finding easy purchase on the cracked tarmac, you lunge right for Kirika, catching her immediately off-guard as you all but crash into her. The second is for you to stab your combat knife, held in a reverse grip, right in the middle of her chest - right where she stuck Mami from behind like the coward she was.

The third is for you to scream into your headset's microphone - as Kirika stumbles backward, stunned from the knife sticking out of her sternum, right into her spine, making it difficult for her to breath - for Misaka to take the shot, just as you fall back onto the floor.

You hear Misaka crying out your name over the channel just as the Anzio's thunderous discharge blots out everything. A moment later, you hear the exact same report - only this time, it's followed with a wet, crunching explosion, and the sensation of a warm sticky mist settling onto your skin.

Propping yourself up by your one remaining arm, you open your eyes. Seeing nothing but rivulets of blood misting your glasses.

Oh, and the bottom half of Kirika's corpse, standing for just a moment before falling back onto the tarmac.

"Nice shot." You murmur into your headset, before closing your eyes as you lie back down.

You are Chiaki Matsuda, and you're very tired.

It certainly didn't feel like you closed your eyes for longer than a few seconds, but when you open them, you notice that you're looking up at the star-filled night sky.

Well. You would be, if it weren't for Kyuubey's stupid face blocking your view. In fact, he's almost nose to nose with you, as if trying to peer into your soul.

"Ah, good. You're finally awake." His irritating voice stabbing into your mind is...well, irritating. "I should remind you, Matsuda, that sleeping on the job is not all that professional. But I'll look the other way this instance, considering the circumstances."

Stupid asshole bastard cat, you ought to -- wait, what's this? What the hell is he doing here? And why does it feel like your head is resting on something really soft and warm, just like your favorite chair?

You look around as well as you could, and you realize that you're not alone in the Helipad any longer. A rescue helicopter is cooling its rotors a few ways from you. You spy Kyoko fussing over Sayaka, the latter peppered with bandages and gauze. Misaka is the same thing, but she seems to be talking animatedly about things exploding. You see Mami lying strapped onto a stretcher, seemingly conscious, but hooked up to an oxygen mask. She sees you looking at her, and she turns away.

This is...all well and good, but it doesn't explain--

You hear sniffling and sobbing above you, and you crane your neck upwards, as painful as it felt.

You manage to see no one else but Iori looking down at you, dabbing at her eyes with a handkerchief. Your head, it seems, is pillowed on your thighs.

You try to frame the obvious questions, but you can't seem to bring them into words at the moment.

In the meantime, your bonus has been wired to your account."

"This...this is what you really do?" Iori murmurs down at you, still tearful. "Being...a magical girl?"

Kyuubey stares at Iori, before shaking his head and turning away. "I'll...see about Kirika Kure's remains. Stay right here. Minase Iori, make sure Matsuda doesn't move around too much, or she'll tear her bandages open."

Kyubey takes contract work and passes it on, sometimes it's nice like body-guarding or killing a monster, often it's wetworks and black ops. Retiring one of our own is rare.

It's only after a few moments of silence - and of you realizing that you've been generously dosed with painkillers, seeing as you're not even feeling the stump where your right arm should be - that you reply to Iori, a small, sheepish smile on your face. You admit it to her, slowly, about what you really do. She knows the sort of things you get up to, but she didn't exactly know about the Magical Girl part.

"I...I never knew Magical Girls were real. I thought...um..." You see her glance down at your hand, and you lift it up to your face, looking at it. Your Soul Gem, in its diamond form, is affixed to your left hand now. Kyuubey must've placed it there for you, for convenience's sake.

You ask if she thought that you were just a bodyguard with a cosplay fetish.

"N-no! Of course not!" Iori shakes her head furiously, trying her best to look offended. "Nothing of the sort! That's patently ridiculous, I..." Her cheeks turning pink, she looks away. "I...I thought it was just a cute uniform your agency makes you wear..."

You would have laughed, if Kyuubey hadn't come around again. Kirika's sword, back in its sheathe, gripped between his teeth. He drops it beside you.

"Your salvage, Matsuda. Before the other girls get designs on it." Kyuubey smacks its feline lips a few times, as if trying to get the taste of something out of its mouth. "I've placed your pistol back in your inventory too, at that. You can thank me later."

You glance down quickly at the blade, expecting it to suddenly come to life and finish the job Kirika started, but it just stays there, just like an inanimate object.

"I told you, don't move around too much." The incubator seems to frown, before shaking its head. "Now, about that leak, Matsuda...did you find out who it is?"

You blink, and then look at Mami, who seems to be crying again.

"Matsuda?" Kyuubey tries again. "Can you hear me, or did the paramedics give you too high a dose of painkillers?"

You shake your head, looking away from Mami, before murmuring to the Incubator that no, you have no idea who the leak is. As deadpan as you can, you posit that Kirika may have known right from the start. You give him the Disney version of the events - that Kirika had gone completely fucking insane and tried to gut you every step of the way as soon as you talked to her.

Kyuubey stares at you for a few moments too long, before slowly nodding. "...I see. I suppose we may have jumped to conclusions about a possible...leak, as you say. She could have simply arrived at that conclusion when you approached her because of her paranoia and coincidentally turned out to be right." He turns slightly to glance at Mami, before back at you. "It sounds logical enough."

You couldn't agree more. You open your mouth to breach the subject about Pinky and her golden toys, but somehow this doesn't seem to be the right moment to.

"I'll give you a few days to rest, and then you can report to the office for your debriefing. I mean it, Matsuda. The office. Don't make me commute to your apartment again." Kyuubey reminds you, and you nod. Seemingly satisfied at this, he goes off again, this time to talk to the helicopter staff.

You reach out with your one remaining hand to grab the sword by its sheath.

It...doesn't feel that bad. Feels nice in your grip, actually.

You think you'll keep it, for a bit. You're scared of the thing, but what's the alternative - Sayaka getting her hands on it?

You turn to Iori, and ask her to give you a hand getting up. You have to thank the people who helped you.

Who do you talk to first?

Walking is a bit hard to do - you're not too used with the sudden change in balance, what with your right arm gone and everything. Iori's there to help you out, though, and with her assistance, you manage to slowly make your way towards Mami's gurney, where the blonde girl is pretending to be asleep.

You get the idea. She's not...ready to talk to you now. Not just yet. Still, it means something if you make the first move, right?

You murmur to her that you're sorry, and reach out with your one remaining hand to squeeze her own, briefly.

She doesn't squeeze back, and you leave it at that. You ask Iori to help you towards the other three girls in the vicinity - the ones loudly chatting their heads off.

"Ah, heeey! Is Murderface! Murderface, heey!" Misaka, sporting her own bruises and bandages, but surprisingly less injured than Sayaka, beams at your arrival. "Not too bad way to end assignment, eh? BANG! YOU ARE DEAD!" She giggles. "Ah, that one felt good! Wish I could have taken picture of Kirika-san's face just before impact!"

She blinks at your stump of a right arm, seemingly disturbed, before grinning up at you. "Ah! Is just flesh wound! Cannot hurt Murderface that easily, eh?" She jumps up and pokes at you. "Misaka can make you augmetic arm, good as new! With it Murderface can be as strong as TEN gorillas!"

You smile at this and thank her for her assistance. You mention something about her getting the power armor ready.

"Ah, of course! Of course! Soon as Misaka gets back, work resumes!"

You pat her on the head - she's a good few inches shorter than you - and it's then that you walk a bit farther to get at the two lovebirds, Kyoko and Sayaka. Kyoko is unharmed for the most part - Sayaka's the one who looks the worst for wear, even with your lack of a right hand. Her cape is bloody and torn, one arm is bandaged from shoulder to wrist, and one eye seems to be swollen shut. She is still holding what looks to be a broken sword of hers, most of the blade seemingly having been broken off in someone's spine, or something.

Kyoko seems to brighten up at your arrival, while Sayaka merely smirks. That's....a good sign, you think. At least she's not rambling about how this is all your fault because Mami got hurt.

"Hey, Murderface--" Kyoko starts.

You remind her to call you Chiaki.

"Fine, whatever. Grats on the assignment, seriously! I mean, retiring a stone cold bitch like Kirika? That takes a lot - and in your case, your entire frickin' right arm, haha!" Kyoko seems not that surprised with the news, even deigning to laugh about it. "I'd give you a hand, but I kinda need both for our new resident pigsticker here!" She slaps Sayaka on the back, who hisses in pain.

Let her see the sword but tell her sternly that you believe it's probably the reason Kirika went crazy. If we told her no, she'd just get more suspicious and probably try to take it away.

The one thing I still don't get is why Kyoko's eye never healed after Kirika stabbed it. Her soul gem wasn't destroyed so she should have recovered. Unless the golden weapons do permanent damage to magical girls? Which would be bad news for our right arm.

I suggest we don't get too close to Iori, she's a bit of wreck right now and acting out a saviour complex on us. Better we treat her with care but at arms length. Be cool about it and don't get too close... though with Mami on a downturn it might be tempting for you guys to turn to Iori I think she's going to be bad news in the long run. If we encourage it she might become obsessed and push herself further into our job (especially if she gets recruited).

Though I dunno, maybe we'll get weak and go with it. We should probably drink this one out and keep her from getting too close, she can reallly do better and she's just acting on our one good act.

You're not too hot in letting someone else get a hold of something so dangerous, and especially not someone who is more or less just as talented with a blade as Kirika was. So you decide to take Sayaka's request literally by letting the sword drop to your hand, before biting the handle gently and then pulling on the sheath - revealing a couple of inches of the golden blade itself.

"Yep, that's Kirika's all right." Kyoko remarks, just as Sayaka frowns at you - she seems to have been expecting you to hand it to her. "Solid gold. Is that a thing nowadays, really? Making your main weapon gold? I mean, sure it looks good, but it's got to be a bother sometimes, right?"

You shrug and sheathe the weapon fully once more, tucking it back in your arm. You think it's just a passing fad, you say. Nothing really important.

Kyuubey walks up to your group. "Well, that's all settled. Kirika Kure's remains are disposed of, her Soul Gem confirmed destroyed. Everyone, let's try and move on from this unfortunate event, and strive to do better in the future."

Silence.

"In any case, let's thank Matsuda for a job well done, and both Misaka and Sayaka for providing support. Oh, speaking of which, Matsuda, would you want a lift to your apartment? I assume you'd want to recuperate there before we reattach your arm?"

You nod. You're still tired, but having Iori by your side helps. You can't wait to get home, get back into your chair, and drink.

"I made you dinner," Iori murmurs after a moment.

...And dinner. Yes. Maybe that, too.

Here's the deal; we can not tell QB. If someone else suddenly starts waving around a gold weapon and goes nuts, he's going to connect the dots and we'll be dead. Hell, everyone close to us will probably get gibbed just to make sure. If we don't come out now we are gambling with both our and their lives that Pinky will give up. This is not a smart gamble.

Seriously, those who don't want to tell QB about this seem to assume that both Pinky and QB are utterly retarded. QB is smart; scary smart even. He's not moraled since he's playing a game so long that we can't comprehend the timeframe, but he understands threats to his project. Pinky has managed to undermine and compromise a significant aspect of the way that we work. We've established that she's an enemy to us and those near us.

Seriously, for someone like QB who highly values information, we're committing a cardinal sin here while putting our friends in danger for what? The thought that QB will act contrary to character and have us killed on a whim?

This is noir. We don't communicate, we die. Do we really want Noir Quest 2: you have a cryptic note from the crazed magical girl "Murderface" you just had to retire; figure shit out? I don't, since that would mean we lost, and I fucking hate losing

That makes sense in most situations, but we're basically dealing with broken magic girls here. What happened with Mami is a pretty clear cut example; she clutches on to the idea that you are all better people then you think you are, you love her for it but it makes her act in ways which endanger the mission. She wants a good ending but couldn't see past what she wants you all to be.

Paranoia, grudges, rumours. Your team is a hot pot of teenage issues mixed with a grim mission and a harsh reality. Kyoko is probably the safest girl to be open with because she rarely reads between the lines she doesn't like thinking too hard about implications.

Sayaka dislikes us and might even try and twist any evidence we give her we're losing it as a excuse to try and get you retired.

Mami is a good shoulder to cry on, she plays the big sister to cope with the cruelty of it all, she wants it all to be worth something, she can't handle some parts of the job.

Misaka seems like a mad scientist, good for theory crafting but I'd be cautious handing her anything too explosive (at least in magical terms like your golden weapons) who knows what she'll do with it. We don't know enough about her to know if she can keep a secret either. Kyoko at least seems to respect that kind of thing to a point.

So I think we need to be honest to a point, but keep certain things like our failing control of our emotions to ourself.

I think we need to make ourselves seem better in a report, yes, but QB still needs to know. Knowledge is power and by "losing" I mean "we die." If anything else pops up Golden weapon related and we haven't reported everything we know? We'll be considered to be compromised and dealt with accordingly. Thus anyone who doesn't want to report to him is basically banking on a combination of Pinky giving up or QB being merciful... two horribly out of character ideas.

We are making a classic mistake if we don't come forth with all the information we know; let's be at least a little interested in the survival of us and our allies and tell QB

No, I'm saying tell QB. Telling the other girls and not QB is suicidal. We know we can't trust Mami as she's almost retardedly naive and another fellow MG is counting the days until she gets an excuse to off us. This kind of information has will make it to QB eventually; the longer we wait the less chance we'll have control over how he hears it. Thus we need to make sure that QB hears it from OUR mouth, not secondhand.

We tell QB and the rest of the squad after we've been debriefed. We make sure to tone down the out of control raging parts, but QB absolutely needs to know. This is someone fucking with his plans, he takes this sort of shit seriously. If we do not make sure QB knows about this and that we're a reliable agent on his side of the equation we're dead, sooner rather than later.

Really people, there's a reason "when in trouble, disclose on the double" is a useful goddamn phrase. We're up to our neck in shit and if we don't make sure QB knows we aren't going to fuck him we'll be fighting a battle against Pinky and him. That's not something we'll win

That sort of goes against the idea we were trying to look what is best for her in the first place. If this incident taught us anything; we are dangerous to be around. We'll take almost any job, we drink to escape some terrible memory and we rub other psychos the wrong way.

Not that it matters though, I figure she'll go down that route no matter how distant we try to be. I doubt we'll flat out reject her hard enough to make her hate us.

Harem is a poor term for our relationships and it's not ideal (or even fitting) to try for one. Rather we have people who we don't hate, who even to a degree seem to look up to us. Mami is the only one I feel we have any real feelings towards, without prompting (as far as we remember) she thinks better of us. Or at least she did. Mami inspires this with most of the girls, probably because it's how she copes. Still she's out blonde dame. Iori is more like a dependant, she feels safe around us, she's getting confused about it but we only really wanted to make sure she got better. We had no real desires towards her. Misaka is just a trusted contact as far as I can tell.

Seems to me what we really want here isn't a harem to engage fantasies with, rather people we can rely on and wish well of. Yes, there is a difference.

I'm thinking. We can tamper with the Deagle to make it unsable, right? I'm thinking we can unchamber the bullet in the barrel, remove the magazine and wrap/stuff duct tape all over it. Alternatively we can pour silicone or liquid rubber down the magazine hole in the handle, and into the barrel.

As for the golden katana, we can do the same around the pommel and make it difficult to unsheathe. Alteranatively we can seal the pommel and opening in a block of bakelite.

Why am I not suggesting we just encase the weapons entirely in bakelite? Because what if the weapons disappear inside the brick and re-appear outside?

>> ☐ Anonymous 07/03/12(Tue)15:10 No.19725167

Seems like we're pretty much all in agreement about telling everyone.
So our plan is as follows:
1. During the debriefing, tell everyone about Pinky, the golden weapons, and the corruption.
2. Make sure we look reliable while doing 1.
3. We should dispose of the golden desert eagle and katana, probably best to just put it into QB's possession for study and confinement. Also make sure Sayaka doesn't do anything stupid like try to take the katana for herself. Be sure to mention that the weapons have an annoying tendency to reappear in our possession so it doesn't look like we stole them back or anything.
4. Explain to Iori fully how being a magical girl works and all the horrors of it. Make certain she isn't going to do something stupid like become a magical girl to fight with us.

Any comments or objections?

Isn't Misaka in this quest sort of like Vlad from Max Payne? She's a crazy weapons dealer with a weird speech inflection and a dark sense of humour.

I don't think we know enough about her yet. We get along with her and seem to have a history, question I keep thinking of is if she's the kind of person to treat information like a commodity, she might even have a price for information about us.

Could just be meta and paranoia talking, but remember she wanted in on this mission partly as a favour and partly because she doesn't like Kirika.

Point is, she's a good ally for now but we need more information before we make assumptions about her.

One thing we need to lookout for is a possibility someone brought up in another thread: Iori wishing for us to become happy and the wish going grimdark and killing our emotions or something and leaving us an empty happy shell.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you're starting to think that you are, in fact, playing the game with a few cards short of a full deck. You've always known that you weren't all there to begin with - the gaps in your memory, the nightmares, the hallucinations and everything else clued you in - but you're starting to think that there may be something really, really wrong with you.

You've also lost your favorite drinking arm, but that'll be remedied soon enough.

It's been approximately twelve hours since you retired Kirika Kure. With the help of your personal arms dealer and backup sniper Misaka, you managed to reduce the entire upper half of her body into bloody mist. Sure, you had to play patsy for a while and get your arm hacked off, but all's well that ends well.

Dinner with Iori was something...awkward. You had apologized in advance that you may make a mess of yourself, what with having just your non-dominant hand to handle food with - but she didn't mind at all, and fed you herself, the idol sitting primly on the arm rest of your favorite chair while both of you watched Justice Dick reruns. The food itself was surprising, mashed potatoes with vegetables mixed in, and some sort of spicy steak.

It's a shame you threw up most of it hours after. Half a bottle of whisky doesn't really help with digesting real food besides painkillers, as you just learned.

>>19746791

It is now late morning, and you're out and about, in the backseat of a cab. Since Kyoko is out on assigment and Sayaka's not available, you've taken Iori along with you for your debriefing, the idol sitting beside you. The stump where your right arm once was is properly dressed, and your empty sleeve pinned up so as not to dangle too much.

You're a bit glad Kyoko won't be around to bump into. She'd say something like how you look like one half of that girl from that cripple fucker game.

The trip is a bit of a way, and you feel Iori leaning onto your shoulder. Must be falling asleep - you had a late night last night, after all, and you don't know if she slept well after dinner. You're sure you didn't wake her up with your being sick, though.

You let her sleep. There's still some time before you get there, and she is pretty warm. It's a really cold morning, in any case.

[]Wake Iori up and have her move back a bit to recover personal space.

You check your inventory.

You still have your two emergency canisters of painkillers, which gives you two doses each, a total of four. Sadly, you are all out of cigarettes. You need to buy another pack.

You have also lost your pink cellphone, as it was skewered by none other than Kirika herself. You never did find out what was in that diary function. Oh, well.

And surprise! Not only do you have the golden Desert Eagle with you, but also Murasame, Kirika's former main weapon. It's a heavy thing, but you can easily draw it and use it one-handed. The sheathe is pretty elaborate, made of heavy ebony and embossed with gold relief depicting dragons and stuff. The blade is solid gold, and has the roman numeral XX inscribed on the blade itself.

Oh, you also have your debit card. Kyuubey gave it to you just before sending it off. You have four thousand dollars in it. He told you specifically to not spend it all in one place.

[]Examine Desert Eagle.
[]Examine Muramasa.
[]Exit inventory and wait to arrive in destination.

You leave your inventory alone. No need to tinker with it right now, especially with the gaudy weapons. Iori's much too close to you to do anything useful with them, anyhow, and you're not exactly comfortable with the idea of going berserk with her in near proximity.

You forget to mention, of course, the Soul Gem you took from Midori - you've been using it for a whisky warmer for so long that it actually smells of the stuff, now. You take it out momentarily, rather tempted with the idea of seeing if you can crush it with one hand.

You put it back. You should probably start her interrogation after your debriefing.

Messing with your Inventory done with, you lean back and close your eyes. Things are a bit quiet at the moment, so you take your time to enjoy it. Having a soft-bodied idol settling warmly against your side, her breath tickling your ear, seems to help.

You doze off for twenty minutes before you arrive at your destination. Iori is the one who wakes you up, and she apologizes for drooling on your shoulder, flushing all the while. You shake your head at the apology, and you both step out of the car after paying the driver.

Your destination is, in fact, a tall office building at the very heart of Mitakihara. It's certainly no Tower One, but it qualifies as a skyscraper. Officially called the QB Heavy Industries Tower and unofficially called The Officio Assassinorum by those in the know, it's a fifty-story building that could easily pass for a hotel building, if not for the usual flood of salarymen and women flooding in and out of it in an hourly basis.

What started out as a measly front to a hired magical girl organization had swelled into a legitimate business involving military hardware. You get your own freebies from it, sure, but with Misaka being the head of R&D, you've long since found out that befriending her was the key to getting the real goods, especially the illegal ones.

You've seen the recruitment posters, the printed propaganda to lure graduates and working men and women to manage the legal side of his company. In a rather human-like cunning, he had used his own appearance as a mascot of sorts, and from his current employee headcount, it's a massive success, especially when you consider that 80 percent of his employees are women.

It's a bit hilarious when you consider that these people will never find out that they've been working for the mascot all along.

Iori is holding onto your empty sleeve as you lead the way amidst the rush of employees working out their pitiful lifespans for money.

You get in easily enough - the guards posted outside salute you as you step past them, none of them giving you or Iori a second look. The employees give you quite the berth as well, and you head towards the elevator that leads only to one floor - the penthouse, and the Officio Assassinorum proper.

Iori seems to be intimidated with all this, and has switched sides to grasp at your own hand as you both wait for the elevator to get to its destination.

You don't mind, you suppose. It's just her holding your hand. No one thinks badly about girls holding hands with other girls.

The doors slide open, and you're treated to a room that's completely white. White furniture, white walls, white everything - making each splash of color garish and blinding, almost. This is the room that reminds you that you're working for an alien mutant cat from God knows where. There's a receptionist's area, and the wall at the far corner has a grand double door that leads to Kyuubey's room.

Surprisingly, Mami is manning the receptionist desk. She's wearing rather tasteful office lady clothes, with a black armband pinned at her left sleeve.

She glances up at your arrival, no emotion on her ace. "Vindicare Murderface," She greets you politely, stiffly. Her expression darkens just a bit at Iori holding your hand. "Kyuubey will see you in a moment."

It's...yeah, you're in trouble. She's never really used your rank to refer to you.

How do you greet her?

While you consider yourself not at all that given to emotion, it does sting a little bit to be addressed in a manner by the person you once considered to be the only really good thing in your life. Still, you manage to work up what would pass off for you as a sincere if awkward smile, and you greet her good morning, as well as saying how you're glad that she's healed up just fine.

Mami glances at you for a moment, before nodding slightly, before averting her gaze and going back to the laptop in front of her.

The meaning of her black armband isn't all that lost to you, and you mumble an apology. Sure, you lost your arm, and it was your job, but somehow you feel guilty about the entire thing.

This she seems to ignore, and you stand there unable to say anything else, when the intercom beside Mami's computer crackles slightly.

"Mami, please send Matsuda into my office. Alone, if she's got Minase Iori with her."

"Yes, sir." Mami replies quickly, before nodding up at you and gesturing towards the doors. Iori looks at you, gripping your hand tighter, as if loathe to let go.

You shake your head at the idol and gently pull your hand from hers. You'll only be a moment, you say, and you head towards the doors. You fail to see her glance at you, then at Mami, before making her way to one of the waiting seats at the other side of the room itself.

You make a note to try and speak to Mami again after your debriefing.

As you enter Kyuubey's office, you are momentarily disoriented as the doors close behind you. In contrast to the white environment outside, Kyuubey's office is...well, you know it's a room-wide hologram thing where the floors, walls and ceiling are displaying a chunk of space, the wall across from you showing what appears to be a strange planet in orbit, completely black with spikes jutting out from all over the surface.

The spikes seem to be sprouting from underneath the planet's crust, by the way they're forming large cracks and fissures on its surface, revealing what looks to be blazing pink light from within.

Kyuubey is sitting, perched on a rather luxurious high-backed chair, in front of many LCD screens scrolling data written in a rather unknown language. Photographs flicker past as the data scrolls - of you, Mami, Kirika and Kyoko, as well as a host of other known agents.

You...you're pretty sure you saw the girl with pink hair in there, somewhere, but you're not too sure. The one you saw doesn't have black eyes, and looks normal.

"Ah, Matsuda." The chair turns to face you, and you see Kyuubey's bright crimson eyes focus on yours. "Ten minutes late. I'll dock that from your pay. How is the arm, and how is staying with Minase Iori turning out for you?"

How do you respond?

You reply in a neutral, deadpan fashion, as you are usually wont to do. When you answer his question about Iori, it's then that you let out a bit more than you want to - that is, you're alright with her staying, and you're finding her useful to be around.

"Intriguing. And here I thought you'd have driven the girl away in an hour with your dreadful habits and the horrible way you treat guests. I'll have to make note of that."

You're slightly relieved that Iori's outside, in any case. You stay silent, waiting for him to continue. You've learned long ago to just let the Incubator continue on his own pace and shut up.

"...In any case, let's begin your debriefing. You will report to me, with as much detail as you can provide, how you came to retire Kirika Kure." The screens behind Kyuubey begin to flicker, and then show Kirika's record in full - and you spot the bright crimson text at the bottom of her mugshot. 'Retired'. What a sad footnote to an otherwise sterling record.

"Please remember that the information you provide helps this company, so ensure that the information itself is complete, precise, correct and accurate." Kyuubey's voice gets that strangely human tone whenever someone recites from rote memory. "Still, before we begin, is there anything you would like to say about the leak or what we perceive to be a leak, Matsuda? Anything you want to add or change from your statement?"

You shake your head. Your understanding of the leak situation, if there ever was one, hasn't changed since last night, you say. Kyuubey tilts his head slightly to the side, as if studying you carefully, before nodding.

"If you say so, Matsuda. Now, please give me your report."

And you do so. You tell him a 'complete' version of the events as it played out. Your attempt to get in contact with Kirika to feel her out, and possibly make an attempt there, which failed due to her paranoia. Your approaching Misaka for new equipment and sniping assistance. Sayaka's contribution to the effort, and how it all played out on the helipad of Tower One.

After your recounting of the events, it's then that you finally broach the subject of the Golden Weapons. It's here that Kyuubey seems to take more interest at what you're saying. You pull out the sword from your inventory, and tell him about what Kirika had revealed about it - the number on its blade, and how the 'girl' who had given it to her had told her that the person carrying a golden gun with the number VIII would be responsible for Kirika's death. You also mention here that ever since Kirika had received the blade, she'd been unstable, which would explain her recent trend of killing principals.

"Interesting. And you say that the firearm you now have at the moment is the same one in this 'prophecy'? May I see it?"

You oblige him, placing both weapons on the transparent orange desk that manifested in front of him a mere few moments ago.

"You simply got this Desert Eagle from your shield when you tried to cycle it for a new firearm, I see. Do you know about this 'girl' who gave Kirika her gun? Have you met her before, and if you have, can you provide me with a description?"

You take a deep breath and reveal what little you know about the girl with the pink hair and black eyes. You tell him, carefully, about your encounters of her, but confining it to merely seeing her in your dreams, nothing to incriminate you or throw you into suspicion. You also mention how, during your usage of your Time-stopping abilities, she seems to pop up every now and then, but only as a vision, and not something you can actually interact with.

You give him what you think is an accurate description, and it's then that the Incubator blinks at you. He turns slightly in his seat, and taps one of the screens beside him with a paw.

And the smiling face of the mysterious girl with the sunless eyes are displayed from the entire series of screens, a large portrait of her looming up at Kyuubey from behind.

"I'd have figured as much. Thank you for coming forward with this information, Matsuda." Kyuubey says after a moment, turning to face you. "Am I correct to say that this is the girl you've been seeing, and the one who gave Kirika her sword?"

You nod, unable to take your eyes off the digital portrait.

It's then that Kyuubey sighs, and gestures towards the wall behind him, displaying that strange planet.

"It's strange, isn't it, Matsuda? How this particular rock in space looks. What you're looking at isn't a planet or an asteroid - it's actually a grief seed. We found it hiding in the shadow of this planet's moon. It's invisible to everything else - NASA has yet to even discover it - but we have enough technology with us to actually see what it is."

He hops off his seat and onto his desk, placing one foot on Muramasa's handle. "We believe it belongs to a Witch unlike any other. A Witch who retains her presence of mind, thought, and has untold amounts of power - to the point that we believe that she is more of a concept than an actual being. Not something you can easily kill, at that."

Kyuubey looks up at you.

"We call this Witch Faust, and we believe that she is preying upon Magical Girls. I've already received reports from other agencies of their agents encountering her too, and being found murdered days later. This is the first time I've heard about her visiting someone's dreams or giving them weaponry, however."

"Have you been experiencing anything strange besides these visions, Matsuda? Any sudden, unexplained bursts of anger, frustration, madness? How is your amnesia?"

I really can't give you an answer on the amnesia front, if I forgot something then there is no way for me to know if I forgot it or not. I don't have a good point of reference for it.

I did really want to kill Kirika but I find that difficult to attribute to any outside force as I hated that bitch, it may be connected but nothing verifiable.

I have felt slightly less apathy and hate for everything other than booze, nicotine and pancakes, which is rather strange.

Also my shield is a bit buggy, didn't properly work when fighting Kirika, but given that it has a massive gash in it and that Kirika is connected to this "Faust" and had time related powers of her own, we once again can't draw anything conclusive from it.

Also I am suffering from nicotine withdrawal and severely want a pack of cancer sticks.

You tell Kyuubey about what's been happening to you for the past few days or so, emotion-wise. Besides feeling relatively normal and just a little more positive about things than before (which doesn't really amount to much), there was that one time where you pulled the gun on Sayaka. Of course, that time both of you were considerably stressed due to the circumstances, and you thought that she was the leak.

You also tell him about how Sayaka saw your eyes going black during this altercation.

"Ah." Kyuubey nods at you. "Yes, Sayaka did mention that in her own debriefing. She said you nearly made her pee herself, at that." The incubator's tail swishes back and forth. "Idly, she asked me if it meant that you would be retiring soon."

Silence, between the two of you. Behind him, the screens making up Pinky's portrait seems to flicker - and it's then that the portrait itself seems to move. Its black eyes blinking, before focusing on you.

Her smile widening, showing bloody teeth, Pinky gives you an almost cheeky wink.

"I know what you're thinking, Matsuda, and let me assure one of my more...able employees that your retirement, should I choose to have it processed, will not be anytime soon." Kyuubey closes his eyes as he nods, seemingly satisfied.

"Kirika Kure, as you've noted, was unstable - but despite her record, I've noted that she had been on the verge of going rogue. A few of my contacts have seen her talking with other Incubators, Incubators that are not affiliated with this agency. So, for the moment, rest assured, at least, that I will not be ordering Sayaka to kill you in the near future just because of a few harmless outbursts here and there."

You feel better already.

"Now, about these weapons. Would you mind if I kept them for a while? I will have some of my staff see just what they are. If my suspicions are correct, they have some sort of influence on their wielders. Your eyes turning black - that may just be an effect of your frustration, but please tell me should any other symptoms appear. It may give us clues on this Witch and what she's doing, and how we can put her down before she kills any more Magical Girls."

You nod in assent, quiet as always.

"Do you have anything else to say, then, Matsuda? Oh, by the way, please collect your smartphone from Mami. From now on, all your future dossiers will be sent to it. As a precaution, I sent Sayaka to purge our courier service, just to remove the possibility of a leak from that avenue." Kyuubey reopens his eyes. "If there is nothing else, then do not let me detain you."

Do you have anything else to mention?

You are confusing Noir story with Spy story, that's what is infuriating. We are not in a sociopathic spy story. We are in a Noir story, and you seems to have some trouble to understand it's meaning.

A Noir story is all about keeping the ever so rare friends even when they fuck up, friends we can trust. Mami is our light. She's the only one nice to us that we can remember at all. She was our only friends for a long time. She saved our life. She's the only one that has given any meaning to our life, until recently.

And you are not unlike "she is sulking since yesterday because we killed her friend, BETTER MURDER HER IN HER SLEEP SO SHE WON'T BETRAY US".

Protips : That's sociopathic, that's not Noir. And you have absolutely no excuse to advocate such an idea.

And Alexander, that's not the first time you advocate the kill them all solution. I don't care about it, normally, but this is the straw that breaks the camel.

While I agree on the "Having less friends in Noir is better"-Part that doesnt mean that we should throw out Mami of our inner circle.

I mean, we don't even know if she is disappointed in us or just ashamed of herself.
Even our cold and broken Homuhomu does in fact genuinely like her. And Mami is probably one of the few people around that does care about us. Heck, she probably is the only genuinly nice and unselfish person we've met so far. We don't want to lose that.

Don't know about you guys, though, but more than being angry at Mami, her ratting us out to Kirika hurt way, way, way much more than Kirikas Blade and I think that if anything, we should at least tell her that.

Basically this.

Noir is very much about there being few people you can trust and sticking by them. That's why they often die to send the MC on whatever rampage they go on to get answers and revenge

In the end, all of them are still human and have failings. Ours is we are emotionally deadened and an utter cunt to be around, Mami's is that she still tries to be everyone's friend and have everyone get along

We're used to that stress, we're used to the beating stick. Mami isn't.

Its not like we have a shitton of people either.

We can only mildly tolerate Kyouko in small doses
Sayaka is a raging bitch every time we glance in her direction
Misaka is...well Misaka.
Iori is still recovering from an attempted rape+being splattered with her would be rapist's blood

With all this shit, Mami is the only one that's nice to us, she's the only we can be around for an extended period of time.

Have any of you robots stoped to think about this from Mami's perspective? One of her friends was going to kill another one of her friends. Look at it this way. The one who was previously our shoulder to cry on, now only gives us the cold one.
If that wouldn't make us feel abandoned then I don't know what will. We basically saved her life and and she hates us for it. There's no amount of alcohol and drugs (well maybe a lethal dose) that can make us immune to that.

"Ah, yes, of course. The question of your arm." Kyuubey blinks at you, before sitting back down on its haunches. "Unfortunately the one that was severed was much too damaged for us to try and salvage it, so I'll have to make you a new one. Please hand over your Soul Gem."

You acquiesce immediately, taking your Soul Gem off the back of your left hand by biting at the edge and pulling away. You place it on the table in front of Kyuubey, who then places a forepaw on the very center of the purple diamond.

"As for a new place to stay, I'll see if I can't get you a place somewhere a bit more secure. Somewhere closer to Headquarters would be preferable. Give me a few days."

It's then that your Soul Gem seems to spark, and you grunt slightly as you feel as if something is driving a hot spike into the stump of your right arm. Hastily, you undo the pin that keeps your sleeve folded up - just in time, too, as a newly-made arm, of flesh and bone, fills it. All fingers working, ability to grasp objects fine, ability to make rude gestures good.

"Stop being immature and listen, Matsuda." There's a chiding tone in Kyuubey's voice as he nudges your Soul Gem back to you, which you take and place back in its rightful position on your right hand. "Your Shield malfunctioning is regrettable, but I'm afraid I'm not at all qualified to look at it. I doubt anybody else in my staff is, either. Give it a few days, maybe not abuse it for a while, and see what happens. You can have Misaka look at it if the problems persist."

There is a thing that people do when having a falling out with someone.

Its called "talking to them." Maybe you've heard of it before?

Going with some of the suggestions here, logically we should find a private place and attempt to reach out to Mami and tell her our feelings about the situation.

If she doesn't want to continue being our friend after hearing what we have to say, then so be it. But we should give her and ourselves time to sort through this. It hasn't even been a day since Kirika was retired.

The Incubator's chair swivels around to face the monitors fully. "As for the Magical Girl you captured, see if you can reveal who she's working for, like I told you before. If she's too stubborn, you can dispose of her any way you want, just don't make too much of a mess."

You thank him. Only seems proper, after all. He just gave you back your arm.

"No need to thank me, Matsuda. Always here to give a hand to my agents if they need one."

Ha ha. Very funny. Yes, that is a fake laugh, you mutant cat bastard jerk.

"Mami will lead you to the Silent Room for the interrogation. Until then, keep up the good work, Matsuda."

You bow slightly to him, before walking out of the room, the doors automatically opening at your approach and closing behind you.

At the receptionist's area, you see Iori studiously looking at her phone, and trying to ignore what seems to be someone sobbing loudly. At the desk, you see Mami is comforting what looks to be a young woman with long, pale brown hair and startlingly-clear green eyes. She is wearing a black armband too, and is crying into Mami's shoulder, who looks ready to cry herself.

"A-ah. Chiaki-san--" Mami's cold shoulder act seems to be put off a bit as she glances at your way, and it's then that the girl stops crying, glaring at your direction.

"W-wait, Oriko-san!" Mami tries.

You see the slap coming, but you let it happen. It's weak, but it took your glasses right off, sending them clattering on the polished marble tile floor.

"Y-You...you killed Kirika! You killed her like an ANIMAL!"

Iori is stunned at this development, her eyes wide and speechless. Mami looks about the same, too.

How do you respond?

We are not emotionnaly dead. We are not a robot. We are a broken protagonist who've seen the worst of the worst - the kind of main character that need painkiller to live with herself.

Murderface hate herself more than anything, she hate what she has becomes, she hate what she was forced to do to survive, she hate everything in heir life. She hates herself more than the world, because she's pitiful, and she know it. Everybody hate her, or want her dead, and she take pride in knowing that she's not the last of those haters. And yet, she strive to survive in a sorrowful world.

That's why Mami is important to her. It's the only person that showed her even remotely any affection. She saved her life. She was her light for a long time. With the idol, now, maybe, she's the only person she really care about, and when Mami trows a tantrum, Murderface feels something dying in herself.

During the Iori incident she was just a principal we couldn't care less about and we were full paranoia. After the bloodbath we actually looked after Iori, cleaned her up and didn't leave without letting her have a way to contact us

Sayaka is weird since while we hate each other on principle it seems we can work with her and are able to reach an understanding when necessary. She is still as much of a bitch to us as we are to her for the most part

Acting like that to protect someone from getting mentally broken and/or dead inside is understandable and was in-line with her best interests and her protection. Yayoi didn't need all of that, to be sure, but the safety of the client was #1 priority. It was a part of our job, and we decided to do it even if the client bitched about it and that one probably-dead security mook glared daggers at us for it. We even happened to be right about it in the end.

This is a bit different. For one, we did play an active role in killing Oriko's friend (justified or not). She has some leeway in acting out her grief; so long as she doesn't cause serious harm to us or to our friends or our co-workers, it's okay. Secondly, we probably want pancakes in the future and to not accelerate Mami's descent into despair. Showing that we have some humanity left in us after all the alcohol and painkillers and killing could go a long way towards that.

You turn to stare silently at the girl just as she slaps you again, even harder, at the very same cheek - and this one is hard enough to make you turn the other way, the blow stinging your cheek quite solidly. It seems that it took all she had left, however, as she suddenly stumbles forward, beating her fists weakly and ineffectively into your chest as she sobs brokenly.

"S-she was my only friend! The only friend I had! A-and now she's gone because of you...you took her away from me, and...and I have no one left! No one...!"

She grabs at your collar with both hands as she cries into the front of your Magical Girl costume. Both your hands slack at your sides, you look down at her without a word. It's easier this way, you think. If she hates you, then at least she found something to hold onto. Nothing you say will change anything. No apology will heal a wound like that.

You glance at Mami, and she nods, wiping at her own eyes. She walks forward and gently pulls Oriko off of you by the shoulders. Thankfully, Oriko allows herself to be led away, Mami murmuring gently to her, no doubt to calm her down.

You turn around to pick up your glasses, when you see that Iori herself has picked it up and was dutifully waiting for a chance to give it back to you. You smile slightly and hold out your hand, and she places it on top of your palm. You thank her.

"Chiaki-san, who was that?" Iori asks in hushed tones. "That girl Mami-san is with. Was she a friend of that girl who kidnapped Mami-san?"

You don't really know her, but it's a good chance she is, you reply.

"Ah, I see." Iori nods. "So, um, are we leaving now...?" Iori seems to be eager to get away from this place, and you don't blame her. The office has too much of an alien vibe to it, off-putting and unnerving.

You tell her that she'll have to wait for you a bit more, as there's something you need to take care of first. You say that you will try not to be too long with it.

"A-ah, alright, Chiaki-san. I'll wait here."

After a few moments, Mami joins you, with Oriko sitting by the receptionist's desk, clutching a glass of water in her shaking hands.

"The elevator then, Chiaki-san." Mami says after a moment, and you follow her back into the elevator that brought you to this floor. As the doors close behind you, she presses the button for the subterranean levels - where Magical Girls trained, lived temporarily as recruits, and also where prisoners such as Midori were held.

A moment, and Mami breaches the silence between you.

"Chiaki-san, I'm...sorry about Kirika-san. And I'm sorry, but I don't think I'll be able to forgive you just yet."

She's not looking at you as she says this, rather, at the floor. Her eyes still shining wetly with tears.

How do you reply?

Given that even QB was surprised that Iori could see him and that Mastuda & Mami had previously thought that Iori had too bright of a future to have the potential as a magical girl, has our influence and the circumstances altered that?

You glance at her just as she looks at you, and you give her a silent nod before turning away. That should be enough. She knows you the best, after all. It's not like you to be overly affectionate or cravenly apologetic - you take things in stride, do what's needed, and leave it at that. It's certainly gotten you your fair share of enemies, it's gotten you called some very creative slurs, and it does not help with your ever-shrinking social circle.

But this, of course, is Mami, and a bit of extra effort should be necessary.

You reach out and gently take her hand, lacing your fingers through hers, and giving it a soft squeeze. You hear her gasp at this, a sharply-drawn breath bordering on a sob, and it's then that you let go.

The elevator proceeds in silence the rest of the way, and it soon opens at the Officio Assassinorum floor - ten stories below ground level.

You tell Mami to keep Iori occupied while you're down here, and she murmurs her assent. She tells you to take care just as the doors close on her.

The floor you're on looks more of a typical office setting than anything - cubicles are aplenty, with your fellow magical girls in formal office uniform, clicking away at laptops. Contrary to knee-jerk assumptions, not all Magical Girls under Kyuubey's employ are field agents like you, Sayaka and Kyoko - there are others who perform other tasks that are just as crucial. Mission support, logistics, medical officers, research, even legal. You hear that there's even a PR department, although you're not quite sure how that works. What do they do, make posters and action figures of you or something?

The mild level of chatter from the cubicles suddenly die out at your arrival, only to resurface again. This time, you hear the word "Murderface" being whispered quite often.

You shrug at this, and make your way to the Silent Room - one of many holding cells for prisoners. This one is made especially for Magical Girls, in that it nullifies the magical powers of those occupying it.

The guard posted there is a Magical Girl that you yourself have trained. With long black hair tied into twintails, a costume that looks more like a black schoolgirl outfit than anything else - and her soul gem a red crimson orb glaring from the center of a rather bulky metal belt buckle that's a bit oblong in shape, she brightens at your arrival and snaps you an eager salute.

"V-Vindicare in the premises! Murderface-sempai, g-good morning! The prisoner awaits!"

Murderface-sempai. That sounds so horrible.

You give her a small smile and ask her to put down her hand. Seniority doesn't require saluting.

"B-but of course they do! Seniority demands respect, and I don't know anyone else who deserves it more, Murderface-sempai!" The girl, who you remember is named Kumatora, replies, her crimson eyes shining with an inner fire. You give a small sigh, and pull down her hand for her.

Kids will be kids.

You tell her that you'll won't be long in the Silent Room. She nods, twintails wagging back and forth, before pulling the iron-cast door open for you.

You thank her and step inside - immediately feeling the chill of the Anti-Magic Barrier Kyuubey himself has personally developed and placed to encompass the room. Shaking your hands to ward off the sudden chill, you step forward - and see Midori in her legless self, strapped to a gurney, her wounds bandaged and taken care of, but lifeless.

You take her Soul Gem out of your inventory and give it a small jumpstart by tapping it against your own - and it's then that the body tied onto the gurney with thick leather straps start to breathe again. Long, gasping breaths.

But something's weird. As the color and life returns to her face, Midori seems to be a bit...satisfied. Her cheeks blossoming red, her eyes glazed over. As soon as she starts breathing normally, it's then that she starts to giggle drunkenly.

Drunkenly. How the hell did that happen--

Wait. Weren't you using her Soul Gem as a whisky warmer for a while?

...Yes, you have. Which will make this interrogation all the more interesting.

"You...you bitch. Why didn't you...j-just kill me?" Midori drawls, slurring her words. "Could've been professional with me toooo..."

Wonderful. How do you begin this interrogation?

No need to get physical right away. She's totally hammered, so I doubt physical pain would really affect her anyways. Start off of the standard "who are you and who do you work for" spiel and see if we can't get her to reveal something while her judgement is impaired.

...Well. Physically coercing her is probably out of the question, but that rarely elicits productive cooperation anyway. However, her being sloshed out of her gourd may make talking much easier. Let's begin by taking a seat nearby, and get straight to the point. Ask her what she possibly saw in the company of a bunch of otaku commandos (who, we might remark, she ended up far better off than). If we ask the right questions and show enough restraint, we may get her whiskeyed tongue to slip more than simply intimidating her.

A further point of emphasis in addition to this is that alcohol is a depressant, which subsequently means that it dulls pain. Midori is helpless right now as well as drunk, so it works more to our advantage to gain her cooperation by eroding her hostility and distrust of us while her inhibitions are compromised.

You take the folding metal chair from the corner of the silent room - a rather dented and slightly chipped one, by the looks of it it's been used in many an interrogation - and unfold it beside Midori's gurney. You sit down, still holding her Soul Gem.

You start by asking her name, rank, and Incubator.

"S-Sakamoto Midori...Callidus." She murmurs after a moment. "And...and I can't tell you who I'm working for. N-not...can't, but won't. That's...that's a secret. Nuh-uh."

Fine. You'll get back to that. You ask her why she went along with the otaku rapists.

"Why are you asking me thaaat? What...what kinda Magical Girl are you then, Murderfaaaaace?" Midori giggles again. "D-d'you ask yourself why you....you do things for that mutant cat of yours, just like I do mine? For the paycheck, of course! "L-look, I know...I know I'm in a bad place, here. I'm drunk, but I'm not shtupid." Midori reaches out with a hand, and you unconsciously grab it. "Y-y'can kill me whenever you want, right? Do whatever you want with me, and no one will care. I get that." She hiccups, again. "I don't...even mind when you blew my legs off. Part of the job, yeah?"

Perhaps we could sway her a bit by subtly suggesting that her parents may not be in a safe place, now that she's failed her agency? They WERE paying her to videotape a rape of a well-known celebrity. You reassure the drunken Magical Girl that her being killed isn't on the table yet, and if she cooperates, she may be able to see her parents again. This is strangely out of character for you - your interrogations tend to do with a lot of screaming and beating.

Times are changing, you suppose.

She seems to brighten up slightly at the prospect of seeing her parents once more, and it's then that you ask her what she needs the money for, as well as how she learned of your name.

"Are...are you kiddin' me? Who hasn't heard of the legendary Vindicare Murderface?" Midori seems genuinely amused at the question. "You're...you're a goddamn legend! Th'only magical girl with the perfect time stop ability, with a kill tally rivaling that of Eversor Kure's...a-and the only one who managed to kill a clusterfuck of high-level Witches on her own! Y-you're like a fucking celebrity, Murderface! If I wasn't...a-all fucked up and tied down and shit, I'd ask for an autograph!"

You never really pay much attention to other Magical Girls besides the one you're acquainted with, but this comes as a strange surprise. You're not too sure if this infamy is at all useful, either.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you could use a drink right now. Maybe two, really. No, make that three. Know what, you probably should just take the bottle with you.

You are currently interrogating a Magical Girl you yourself had taken prisoner after a previous assignment. She'd been working with otakus with a real hard-on for professional military hardware and raping young idols on camera. You cut her career off at the knees when you blew them off with a golden Desert Eagle that makes you crazy, somehow.

You're awake and rested, but you're still sore from going fifteen rounds with a crazed mutant alligator ninja named Kirika Kure. At least, she fought like one, hacking your right arm off and basically mopping the floor with you. You managed to keep her still long enough for your sniper support to reduce her to hamburger.

Going back to your interrogation. The Magical Girl in question, Sakamoto Midori, is sloshed out of her gourd, so much that you're actually the tiniest bit jealous. She's been quite forthcoming about your questions, even revealing why she took the job. She doesn't seem to want to tell you who she's working for, however.

Overall, the questioning is going swimmingly. You didn't even have to break out the rusty nails hooked up to a car battery.

"H-hey, hey, Murderface," Midori calls out at you, a goofy grin on her face. "You're actually pretty cute, you know? I bet you clean up real nice."

You're...not too sure how to take that.

[]Ignore the compliment and ask her another question.
[]Thank her for the compliment, and return the favor. Awkwardly.
[]Have Kumatora get you a carton of cigarettes and a bottle of whiskey before proceeding.

Then ask her how she became a Magical Girl. She already told us why (the thing with parents and ramen store), but let's hear the whole story... partially out of sheer curiosity, partially because she's kinda buzzed and might slip who is her boss (which she refused to tell when asked directly).

"I'll bet you say that to all the girls who shoot your legs off," droningly. Pop a painkiller to soothe over the little bumps and repetitions we're likely to have in questioning her. At least she's talking, it's getting her to talk about the right things that'll require patience. "I might be inclined to be a bit more social if you tell me something about who's been paying you."

"W-what?" Midori's brow furrows at your murmured reply, her glazed crimson eyes squinting at you as you take out one of your painkiller canisters, shaking it a bit to hear the rattle of the pills against plastic before twisting the cap off. You pop one into your mouth and crunch away at it, letting the bitter taste of the relaxing medicine blossom on your tongue.

"I...I don't!" Midori finally exclaims, as if the alcohol permeating her body had slowed her comprehension down to a crawl, and she's just catching up. "I'm not that kinda girl...b-besides, no one's interested'n a loser like me." Her voice drops to a pathetic murmur, and she turns away briefly. "All th' other girls in my agency, they're...they're all pretty an' popular. They don't need to be like us, they're just in it for the extra sparkle and glitter and that stuff." She sniffs a bit. "So they're not interested. Pretty sure you aren't, either."

You place the cap back on your painkiller canister and stash it back into your inventory. Waiting for her to continue.

"A-anyway, uh..." Midori turns back to you, seemingly disturbed by your silence. "I became a...Magical Girl when I got hit by a car. Was on my way to make a delivery downtown, when this sportscar just smashed into my bike. Broke both of my legs, my spine, left arm. Cried my eyes out and just waited to die. Then my Incubator came around, and he...he was really cute, y'know. I mean, when you see 'em for the first time, they're all mascot-like an' shit."

Call me paranoid but i dont trust her ,not one bit, she is putting up a good sobstory but in the end she is an illusionist, a very good one from what we can tell and there a lot of ways to get money with such a power which

You ask her, then, what her Incubator looked like.

"I...I can't forget it. He was like a black cat, but from his neck up, he was white, you know? A-and he looked like he was wearin' ruffles. And he had this strange French accent to him, all gentlemanly an' refined. He also had this circle mark thing on his forehead, I always wondered about that..."

You try to ask her for her Incubator's name again.

"N-noope! Nope! Not gonna tell you, Murderface. Nuh-uh. Not even for your autograph. I...It's not like I don't want to tell you or give you a hard time or anythin', but I gotta stick by what I believe in, you know...?"

Yes, if you're a free agent. But she's tied to an Incubator, and the missions that he gives her, not her own jobs. He might have a strict policy on not doing jobs that aren't authorized by him.

>Add to that that she knew of us and our trackrecord
That's apparently because we're kind of famous and a big deal. So was Kirika, and we just retired her, so more people in our line of work will know about us.

Be that as it may, we don't really have any pressing reason to kill her, other than any personal dislike we may feel.

Actually, come to think of it, the world probably would be better if we just shot her through the head.

Still, she's probably drunk. (She could be faking it, but she'd need a reason to think we'd buy it, and magical girls don't seem aware of their surroundings while body and soul are separated.) If she can avoid slipping up trying to peddle a line of bullshit while she's drunk off her ass, she's _really_ good.

"The...the other girls?" Midori seems to take a while to process this question. "I...I know some of 'em, but it's not like they really know me. They're...a bit of an uppity bunch, y'know? Like some sorta clique in school or something. Calls themselves P-Play...date Saints, or something? I can't remember too good..." She shakes her head from side to side, feebly.

At the mention of switching employers, she shakes her head. "I've...I've thought about it, but I don't know if anyone else'll take me on. I mean, us Callidus, we're not really that important, right? Who needs illusions and camouflage if y'can get a Vindicare in a nice sniping position, or a couple'a Eversors to smash the place up. We don't suck as much as the Culexus, but...yeah. Not much demand for us." She sighs. "If I get an offer though, I mean....sure, I'd jump at it. Maybe stop getting the assignments that get me into this sorta crap."

You let her continue as you take her Soul Gem out of your inventory and give it a sniff. It smells exactly like Kong Whisky, your favorite. "And the heck kind of question is that, what do I believe in? I...I believe in upholdin' the contract I signed, y'know! That includes a Non-Disclosure Agreement!" It's then that she sighs once more. "A-although, I do find it kinda weird...my Incubator's secretive about a whole lotta stuff. The other girls I know who work for other Incubators, they're all right, they don't have the same stuff we got. H-hey...what're you doin'?"

We should probably ask about the Kirika incident. QB said she was talking to other incubators, so shuld try to figure out if its the one Midori works for.

You stand up from the seat, shivering slightly at the chill of the room. The Anti Magic Barrier always had that effect on you - making you feel as if you're standing in a walk-in freezer with nothing on except your underwear. It's not as bad now, but the longer you stay here, the colder it'll get.

You have enough information to go on anyway, you think. A description of an Incubator, a sample of his rather unorthodox business practices, a name of a group (or at least something close to it) - it's certainly more than what you might have gotten if you started with the thumb-breaking and the face-shooting early.

"M-Murderface? Where are you goin'? Are you gonna leave?" Midori's voice is startlingly weak now, feeble, as if she's getting weaker by the second. "I'm...I'm not afraid to die, if you really have t'kill me, y'know. Just...remember what I asked for, please?"

You walk over to her, and reaching down, awkwardly pat her hand, her fingers cold and clammy. The alcohol must be wearing off.

You murmur that you'll just be a moment, that you need a drink of your own. She nods at this, and closes her eyes, as if to try and sleep.

"Come back, okay? If...if you just wanna talk, or somethin'." She murmurs.

It's funny how things turn out, you think as you step out of the Silent Room. The first time you met her, you were much too willing to shoot her full of holes.

Now you're not too sure.

It was suggested in the last thread that, given the nature of the missions that Midori was sent on, it may be entirely possible that her organization might retaliate against her family due to her capture and/or failure. Something to keep the rest of the low-level grunts in line. We could also try to entice her with promises of gainful employment for her family. Being a cook for a corporation probably pays more than being an unsuccessful street vendor anyhow. She's probably too much of a liability to do field work, but an illusionist like her could probably find a solid gig in some desk job like marketing or human resources or something. They'd probably need to live the rest of their lives on heavily monitored company property, eating QB-company food, watching QB-company TV, and wearing QB-company clothes.

This is assuming that QB thinks that all this is worth it, though. We should keep pumping her for information and report our findings and/or suggestions to QB.

It's also entirely possible that she's lying her ass off and is leading us to believe that another organization is backing her. We can always fall back on Jack Bauer-esque interrogation to confirm these things, if we get information from QB that contradicts her testimony.

"Ah. Matsuda. How did the interrogation go? Did you get the information we need?" Kyuubey seems a bit too satisfied with itself in its current position. "W-what?" Kumatora, who has once again brightened up at the sight of 'Murderface-sempai' - suddenly pales at the command from the Incubator. "N-no, surely Murderface-sempai didn't...! She couldn't--!"

You narrow your eyes at Kyuubey, and shake your head, grumbling epithets at the smug mutant cat looking so comfortable being nestled against a neophyte's chest.

You tell him what you've found out. You don't exactly clue him in on how you did it - not with your impressionable former trainee around - but you tell him about the description she gave you, the group name that she misheard, as well as her being amenable to a contract recruitment. Kyuubey seems to grow thoughtful at this, blinking every so often as you talk.

"Ah. I see. That's surprising. I was quite sure you were going to town with your prisoner. You've always been quick to use violence. I suppose this is a good thing." He glances beyond you, towards the door leading into the Silent Room. "The description rings a few bells, as do the group name, but I'll have to confirm it, first. As for her working in this agency as a double agent...I can, most probably, overwrite her original contract, but that's not without risks. Are you willing to take responsibility if the worst happens?"

You nod silently after a moment. The worst, of course, would be Midori dying because of the process.

"Very well. It'd be actually good for this Officio Assassinorum to get another Callidus, if anything. No one seems to appreciate the finer act of espionage and subterfuge anymore." He lets out a sigh. "I'll let you know if the contract process is a success."

Kyuubey seems to consider it, before nodding.

"Thank you for telling me, Matsuda. Also, please do not take this the wrong way, but I'm rather pleasantly surprised that you're cooperating so much, now. Keep it up, and perhaps you'll make it to Warmaster soon enough." He leans back on his comfortable perch, making Kumatora squirm a bit. "Now, do you have anything else you wish to say? You take out the Grief Seed you had used trying to calm yourself down after your altercation with Sayaka - and Kyuubey's eyes immediately light up at the sight up of it, the perfectly-round crimson orbs following its every movement. You take this opportunity to tell him about Midori's parents, and how they may be in danger with their daughter being compromised and all.

"As a rule, we Incubators try not to involve the immediate family of our employees in such matters. But since this Incubator is a bit unorthodox, I'm certainly not going to take my chances. I'll see what I can do, Matsuda."

If dealing with the devil was only this easy and this reasonable. For an asshole bastard cat, Kyuubey isn't the worst. He's certainly up there, but he's just like any other boss. All you needed to watch out for was him being an alien and stuff.

You toss the Grief Seed at his direction, and both his prehensile ears catch it in their grasp. You nod at Kumatora, who seems to be itching to salute you once more, except that she has both her hands full of Incubator and it's no really polite to drop your boss while he's feeding.

"Oh, yes. Matsuda, the assignment that's lined up for you this time involves Minase Iori. In fact, she asked that you take this personally. If you have the time, you can ask her for the details, I'm sure it'll be better than waiting for the dossier."

You make a note of that as you leave, stalking past cubicles and quickly-hushed magical girls in office lady clothing.

You never really liked offices to begin with. At the very least, the debriefing and interrogation went smoothly enough for your liking.

Besides that I believe we were ORDERED to stay around Iori, so we HAVE to live with her. She's probably going to be recruited either way, as our compeltely unintentional influence gets her used to the idea, then something bad happens to force her into making that wish.

Metagaming aside, Chiaki can't avoid Iori, nor the place she lives at. Wherever Chiaki lives is never 100% safe, so at least give her the skills to defend herself, and not hurt herself in the attempt. We'd never forgive ourselves if she shoots herself due to our carelessness.

The elevator ride is a short one, now that you're not moving between fifty or so floors. You step out at the ground floor lobby, and you see Mami and Iori waiting patiently by the revolving doors. They seem to have been talking quietly about something just before you came into view - and it's obvious from Mami's flushed face and Iori's pink cheeks that they were once more up to no good.

At least Mami seems to be recovering slowly. Maybe given enough time, she'll like you enough again that she'll make you pancakes once more, eh?

"Chiaki-san." Iori calls, waving to you, and you nod as you approach the both of them, Mami staying behind quietly, a white box in her hands. "Are you finished with your affairs here?"

You say yes. There isn't really anything else to do, here.

"I see. Um, this is a bit short notice, but Mami-san is going to show me around the Shopping District. Would it be alright?"

You blink at this, and nod after a moment. You don't really have any reason to object now that you think about it, and the assignment can wait. Kyuubey never said it was urgent.

"Great!" Iori smiles. "She'll get me back to the apartment later tonight, and I promise not to stay out too late. Mami-san will see to that."

That...should be enough for you, really. You turn back to Iori and remind her never to stray from Mami's company.

"I won't. In the meantime, here--" The idol takes the white box in Mami's hands and places it on yours. "Your new smartphone! I activated it myself. It's got my number in it already, along with Mami-san's and the rest. "

Well. That's convenient. You start to thank her, but she'd already gone, taking Mami by the arm, the both of them eager to get somewhere. You're a bit annoyed at this development at first, but you realize that if Iori could improve your mood by the tiniest bit by simply giving you company, imagine what she could do with Mami.

You glance down at the box in your hands, and open it carefully. In it lies your new phone - a smartphone of all things, the sort without buttons, the entire device just one flat piece of glass welded to steel (or so you think). The display picture, funnily enough, is a picture of both Mami and Iori, smiling at the camera. Probably had someone take the photo for them.

As you glance through the app menu, it's then that you see a diary app. That's...strange. You tap its icon with a finger - and it's then that you get the same kind of dialog you did with your first cellphone. Password, five letters.

And this was supposed to be a brand new model.

You frown at it, before shoving it back into your inventory. No need to fiddle around with doodads right about now. You've got...well, most probably the entire day to yourself.

What do you do?

You step out of the QB Heavy Industries building after a few moment's worth of letting everything sink in. It's been a frenetic twenty-four hours for you, and while the painkiller you took was certainly helping, there was no denying the fact that you had your ass kicked by Kirika. You could've easily died if she went for your neck first rather than your favorite drinking arm.

You flex your new arm again, wiggling your fingers - and it's then that you flick your wrist, the Shield immediately manifesting out of thin air and solidly clamping onto your arm. The comforting weight of your time-stopping device there once more, letting you know that no matter how bad it get, you could always make it worse.

It's then that you settle on what to do, and you hail another cab with your left hand. A smile on your face as you do so.

It was time, at least, to give credit where it's due. You didn't kill Kirika, not really - you only helped. Misaka did her in.

We have evidence, ourself and the cold half a body of the bitch we had to kill both had weapons and saw pinky and have been acting weirdly. It should be evident that we are going to handle it well and quite possibly stave off another problem like Kirika

When it comes to handling Iori, maybe a Leon approach would be best. We're a quiet loner by nature, a cleaner who likes to do her job then enjoy the peace and quiet of a single malt forgetting all her troubles. If she bugs us for some basic weapon handling and safety, sure I guess but we've only got her for a month and she's got a guard at all times.

We've got whisky to keep us company. Maybe we should pay off our tab at some point at the bar, we've got some cash handy.

Mami on the other hand, give her time. We was wrong, it's pure and simple. Telling her about it won't work, because she's so kind to us we don't want to throw everything in her face and burn all our bridges, but we aren't going to change to fit her delusions either. Better to just give her some space for a while and see how things pan out. Show her we care, but don't apologise for the way the world is.

Kyouko already seems to be halfway there, even if she's pretty upbeat most of the time. Anyhow, reading the old threads, I noticed that Madoka was in the old cellphone's contact list. Now, this isn't a big deal for Chiaki because she's so drunk all the time that she can't remember her own name but... why hasn't anyone else even mentioned her? We theorized that is partly why we are amnesiac and so fucked, the event of her becoming a witch and us having to kill her basically broke our mind and we ended up with a new personality in murderface. That's why Mami takes care of us, Kyoko seems to sort of like us and Sayaka hates us

NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you are currently doing a vodka run for a very good friend who helped you reduce a sword-wielding psycho killer into so much mulch. You're not exactly sure if she's even legal enough to drink - as if you are, either, come to that - but you know that's there little else in the way of celebration that you know of that she'd probably enjoy.

Well, besides Space Mountain, of course. You've heard her gush about the damn ride forever - ever since that one time Mami made the mistake of taking her to Disneyland during a slow day. No, you didn't go, because you were too busy nursing a hangover then.

Space Mountain.

Yeah. That's awesome.

But, as it is, you're set on that vodka party. You've already got two bottles of Stolichnaya clinking about in a paper bag, along with a bottle of blackcurrant juice. Just in case Misaka ends up disliking the taste.

The cab you hired drops you off right in front of Warehouse #0069. You tip the driver and step out with your current bounty of contraband - the old man behind the wheel giving you a strange look before driving off.

You pay this no mind. Hasn't he seen a Magical Girl walk around with a bag of alcohol before?

You step up in front of the rusty metal gate and give it a few knocks. Reassuringly, there are voices talking inside, as well as the mechanical grind of servo joints and heavy metal limbs generally clanking around. You take this as a good sign, and push the gate to the side, the wheels creaking.

What you see is Misaka - or rather, her lower half, jutting out from the gaping chest of the powered armor you've seen her tromp around on. As she is currently wearing what looks like a school uniform with a short skirt, you're treated to a not very flattering view of the arms dealer from behind.

You avert your eyes. Blue and white striped isn't your thing, anyway.

The second thing you see is Sakura Kyoko. she seems to be back from her assignment. While it's only been hours since you last saw her, you're not at all surprised that she'd quickly accomplished her task - it was, after all, a cut-and-dried kill request, and if there's anything an Eversor is good at it's reducing a room full of dudes into a charnel house. There would have been nothing left to bury.

She seems to be in a good mood, at least, as she always is after the simple assignments. Enough that she's still standing and putting what looks to be a golden spear - or rather a halberd, topped with a brutal knife-like spearpoint - through its paces. There's a gun barrel jutting out from underneath the blade, and what you think looks like a slot for a magazine. That's as much as you can tell, since its wielder is currently making it spin and twirl fast enough for the damn thing to blur.

Kyoko notices your arrival first, and grins at you. "Hey, Murderface! I see you got your arm back! I guess we've..." She pauses, her grin going wider, showing off her canines. "...got to give you a hand for that!"

Yeah. Hand gags. Very funny, Cyclops.

"Haw! I was only jokin'!"

I agree on this. I feel we did build up some rapport with Sayaka from our short-lived cooperation, and it definitely shows that Blue can have a good head on her shoulders when she wants to. She'd be very inclined to help Kyoko out and would stand well in getting through to her. The less problems we need to deal with in the future, the better... not to mention that having to retire anyone else would be terrible for Mami.

You give the whirling golden spear another glance, your eyes narrowing behind your glasses. Things shouldn't really be happening that fast, should it? Can't the bitch with the pink hair and black eyes give you a little break once in a while?

You shake your head at Kyoko, before moving to a nearby work table, its surface covered with what appears to be hastily-drawn schematics of the armor Misaka is working on. You push some out of the way and place the paper back of happy drinks on the space you've made.

You ask Kyoko about her new spear as you take the bottles out, one by one. You hear the spear's blade scrape the floor as she steps up behind you.

"Oh, this thing?" Kyoko blinks, before tapping the brilliant golden haft with a hand. "Sweet, isn't it? I saw your Desert Eagle, an' Kirika's sword - thought I'd hop on the bandwagon and get this thing prettied up, too! I had Misaka-chan do the detailing for me! Check it!" She holds out the spear to you, one-handedly, and you pass. The things tend to be heavier than they looked, and if you're bad with knives, you're even worse with spears.

So she didn't get it from any strange girl or anything? You ask her this, just as Misaka seems to jolt up from her position inside the armor - a solid thunk indicating that she'd just acquainted her brow against something metal. You hear her cutely swearing in Russian.

"Huh? Naw, I got this from Misaka-chan! Well...I guess you could consider her strange, haha, so probably. But I comissioned this one from her, long ago! Had her give it a gun attachment too, just in case I get a couple'a wiseguys trying to ping me out with guns!"

Well. At least it's not what you thought it was. You let out a small inward sigh of relief, before twisting off the cap of one of the Stolichnayas, giving its contents a sniff.

"Hey, uh, Murderface, are we gonna make her drink that? I mean...she's underage, isn't she?" Kyoko whispers, having moved uncomfortably closer, her one eye wide.

So are the both of you, but you haven't let that stop you before, you reply, before capping the bottle again. It's then that you call out to the arms dealer - and you hear her curse once more as another thunk sounds from inside the suit.

A moment later, and she'd already wormed her way out of the black steel hulk - the armor looking more like a disemboweled giant standing in place, frozen in death. Her face bedewed with sweat, her cheeks flushed pink, Misaka walks up to you, a searching expression on her face. Looking up at you curiously, before reaching up and grabbing your cheeks, staring into your eyes.

"Should...I leave the both of you alone, or something...?" Kyoko asks, lamely.

"Ah! Violet eyes again, Murderface! Not black eyes anymore, that's good, that's good!" Misaka suddenly cheers, all smiles. "Was worried for a moment, Misaka thought she saw black again! But is violet, so is good!"

You don't know whether to be relieved or to be horrified.

"Why is Murderface here, though?" Misaka asks, tilting her head to the side. "Should not be with idol girlfriend at this time of day? Hrm...is curious! Is mystery!"

"What the..." Kyoko snaps in. "...Did she just say idol girlfriend? What the hell, Murderface?"

You've never been one to laugh all-out at anything. Maybe a chuckle or two at the best if you see something as funny as a target managing to knock himself out by running right into a wall in an attempt to get away. But two of the ever-shrinking handful of people you're in speaking terms with, actually suggesting that you're fit to be in a relationship, and with an idol no less? A girl, no less?

You laugh, hard. It feels like you haven't laughed in forever, but you're doing so, now. You're thankful you didn't sneak a sip of vodka before the party itself started, otherwise you'd be snorting it out of your nose.

Both Kyoko and Misaka glance at each other, dumbstruck at what they're seeing, and it's a good while before you manage to compose yourself. You cough a few times, catching your breath, before wheezing out that Iori is definitely NOT your girlfriend. To you, she was just a principal from an assignment, and now she's just...slumming it up with you in concern for her own hide.

"Ah, but idol-san was really worried about Murderface, though," Misaka pipes up as Kyoko seems to recover from the shock and investigate the vodka bottles, taking a sniff of the stuff - and blinking. "Crying all the while! Is like something out of romantic comedy!"

You didn't know about that. Huh. Well, it's probably just the shock of seeing someone without a frickin' arm.

"Yes, but--" Misaka tries again, and you pat her on the head and ask her to get the three of you glasses, and probably a bucket of ice while she's at it. She frowns, grumbling something at you, before moving deeper into the back of the warehouse, where her living quarters are.

"Murderface, this is pretty strong stuff. What if she gets drunk?"

You'll deal with it, you say. What's the worst that can happen?

"I guess..." Kyoko says, uncertainly, before leaning her new golden pig-sticker against a nearby weapons rack. "It's not like she's somewhere dangerous anyway, isn't it? I mean, she's home right now, and if she gets wasted, we can just tuck her into bed after she throws everything up."

You nod at this, before taking your new pack of cigarettes from your inventory - you purchased it on the way to the liquor store - and you stick one between your lips before offering the pack itself to Kyoko. She takes one, nodding in thanks, and you light up yours before lighting hers.

"It's a bit crazy that we're doing this, eh, Murderface?" Kyoko says after a moment. "I mean, girls our age, we're supposed to be studyin' and thinking about guys and stuff...what happened to us? Why do we have to do the dirty work?"

You grunt your usual answer to this question - which is of course nothing. It's a bit too early in this vodka party to get philosophical.

Misaka returns with the glasses and a Hello Kitty mini-thermos' worth of cube ice. "Do not usually drink vodka, you know. Dulls the voices in head, cannot focus on them talking to me when I work!" She chides as she hands you and Kyoko your glasses.

Funny, because that's the entire point of you drinking.

You pour them each a half glassful, letting Misaka drink hers with ice, spiked with the blackcurrant juice. You take out your own Soul Gem, and to their surprise, dunk it in your glass before sipping the clear liquid.

"That's...uh...is that a thing to do, now?" Kyouko asks, eye wide.

You shrug. It's worth a try.

And so the vodka party gets underway. Misaka was kind enough to pull up cushions - clean ones, at least - for all three of you to sit on instead of the dusty, rust-powdered ground, and the vodka seems to be kicking in for both Kyoko and Misaka. Surprisingly, you feel just a bit more buzzed than before. Maybe there is something to dunking your soul gem in the drink as you're drinking it, eh?

For a while, you talk about work. At least the funnier aspects of it,not the soul-crushingly bad parts. Kyoko opened it up by sharing a couple of memories, one of which involving Kyoko stabbing her spear through two guys at once. You laugh at that. Misaka, on the other hand, shared about how one of the guns she was working on suddenly fired right in her hands, nearly taking her head of, but instead takes the head off a prospective burglar sneaking in by the windows.

So that's why she boarded them up.

Soon enough, Misaka is pillowing her head on your stocking-clad thighs, singing off-key, while Kyoko seems to be busy blushing and giggling about how she likes the smell of Sayaka's hair.

What do you do? You can talk to either Kyoko or Misaka. You can pose a question to them that you think may be pertinent to what you want to know, or simply a question you think would be fun to ask while they're drunk.

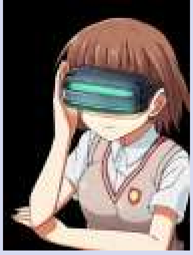
You refill your glass to the point where your soul gem is bobbing slightly up and down in the drink, suspended by the alcohol, before placing it down on the floor and then patting Misaka on the head, ruffling her hair a bit. She giggles at the sensation, seemingly liking it.



After a moment, you quietly give her your thanks for saving your life back at the Helipad. She squirms slightly on your lap, before turning to face you, a pleased smile on her face.

"Was waiting for you to thank Misaka. Misaka is happy now that Murderface remembers." She lets out a sigh, before reaching up with both hands, fumbling for your own. She then presses your hand tightly against the top of her head.

You laugh lightly at this, before indulging her, making sure to look like you mean it. And you do.

Yeah. Once in a while.

Before you can ask her about your shield and if she could fix it, though, Kyoko pipes up, having noticed that you're not really listening.

"Hey. HEEEY! Murderfaaace!" The red-haired Eversor frowns at you, brandishing her half-empty glass. "We've been talking all this time, and you're just quiet! How about you, eh? What kinda girl do you like, huh?"

It's more likely that it's just a perpetuation of the perceived undertones of the anime. There's also the theme that magical girls in Madokaverse only really have each other to turn to based on the nature of what they are and what they do. Then again, Kyoko would have fair reason to think Matsuda is a lesbian given what's happened so far in the quest.

I suppose so, but it's also what we need.

We need someone who gives us a chance to be better than what we are. We need a dame that we are willing to be a hero for.

Given that this is noir it'll probably fall apart and unravel on us, but that's all part of the fun.

Japanese bread stick coated in chocolate, a common thing for anime is the pocky game where two girls (usually) try to eat the pocky at the same time going closer to a kiss until one of them snaps the stick.

The stick is pocky, a Japanese snack which is essentially a cookie-stick coated with flavorings, like chocolate. A popular vehicle for showing romantic or sexual attraction is to have two characters share a stick and eat towards the center together. Think of it like the spaghetti noodle scene from Lady and the Tramp.

"M-Man, you got some high standards there, huh, Murderface? Make you feel all good and toasty about yourself inside AND make pancakes!" Kyoko giggles, her cheeks flushed crimson as she drains her drink, before exhaling heatedly and holding her glass out for more. You refill her as best you could, your grip on the bottle a bit shaky. Wow, you're getting really fucked up from the soul gem dunking thing, and you haven't even opened up the second bottle yet!

"But pancakes? Why it gotta be pancakes? Why is it a prerequisite to get into yer panties, Murderface? Is it because you got a fetish for sugary breakfast food or somethin? Some kinda ritual involving pancake batter, or what?"

You frown at this, before reaching over and taking Misaka's left shoe off of her foot and then tossing it at Kyoko's head. Or at least, try to. You're too drunk to aim properly, and you end up htting the armor instead.

You just really like pancakes, that's all, you grumble. If you're going to end up with someone - girl OR boy - they'd better be able to cook up a mean stack.

"Fine, fine. But ya got Mami for that already, though. She really likes you, although I'll be damned if I know why." Kyoko shrugs, reaching up to clumsily re-adjust her eyepatch. "Gah, fucking thing. I hate having to wear this." A moment more, and she gives up. "Anyway, as I was sayin'. You got a thing going with Mami. I know you're a hardass an' all, but try not to screw it up, okay? You look up at Kyoko before putting a finger to your lips. The red-haired girl nods, waving a hand, sipping at her glass while you yourself quickly drain your own glass of the vodka currently soaking your Soul Gem. The bright purple bauble clinks against crystal as you put down your glass, and it's then that you answer the call, lifting the phone up to your ear.

You clear your throat a few times, and greet the caller with what you hoped was a steady, sober-sounding voice.

"Ah, Chiaki-san. I'm...I'm sorry to call you on short notice, but may I ask what your three sizes are?"

What? What, is that a thing idols ask their acquaintances now? Really?

"Don't worry, it isn't for anything...bad. I just need them. Do you know what they are, or at can you at least give me a size approximation?"

The expression of confused outrage on your face must be hilarious enough that Kyoko, in mid-sip, spits out her drink to the side and snorts, erupting into laughter. Cackling about vodka shooting up her nose.

You...remember getting measured for something, long ago. You haltingly recite the numbers back to Iori, with the reluctant disclaimer that one or two of them might be a bit increased at the moment. Alcoholism certainly doesn't help.

"This should be fine, Chiaki-san. You're actually pretty close to my sizes! I can use these! Thank you! We'll see you back at the apartment this evening!"

The line goes dead before you can even ask what the hell she needed it for.

All you can hear now is Kyoko laughing the laughter of thirsting gods.

Yeah, yeah. You're getting faintly annoyed at this, when you feel something fiddling with your shield. You look down and you realize that Misaka seems to have woken up, her eyes hooded as she pulls your right arm onto her own lap as she sits beside you. Fingers tracing the gash on the shield.

"It's broken," Misaka murmurs. "The machine spirit of this device is broken. It is not whole. It is crying because it is not whole, and it cannot work as it should." Misaka's voice is mournful, quiet, and almost tearful - which is strange, considering she's almost always upbeat. "This unworthy one wants to fix it, but...cannot. Only Akemi Homura can."

Wait. That name. But how could--

It's then that she looks up at you, and you feel sobriety washing over you like a cold bucket of ice water.

Misaka's eyes had gone completely black.

"The Machine Spirit cries out for its missing pieces. You have two, Homura. Get the others. Right this wrong. End this world before she does."

Before you can react, Misaka closes her eyes and flops forward, against you, drooling into the collar of your suit. Snoring again. Sleeping deeply.

How do you react?

Those golden weapons again. Does that mean we can only get our memories back and fix the shield by collecting all of them?

Also, the "Black Eyes" are usually Pinky's calling card, right? How did Pinky get her claws into Misaka? Is getting our memories back a trick or something?

Ok... Ok, i have a theory... We actually are the Homura from the main series. When we were timelinejumping, we came upon a timeline were Mami became Faust, and she attacked us and broke our shield, it went haywire and sent us SOMEWHERE, deleting our memories in process. We ended up in this time, with a shield that can only do timestop, and has lost its abilitie to timejump. And we lost all our memories. We need to repair it to get back to the canon storyline.

Frankly, it isn't in Pinky's best interest to let us know we can 'fix' anything. Up until now she's been trying to egg us into a fight, to be bold and brash, and charge full steam ahead - more or less. And that's like putting blinders on. Makes other choices less obvious.

Unless telling us something along these lines leads us down a path she desires, deeper into the Rabbit Hole, so to speak. Paranoid, let us be. This is an Ultraviolet level concern.

You are frozen for a moment as what Misaka had just said to you sinks in. Something about your shield's spirit being broken, and how you yourself must fix it? And some more about ending this world before 'she' could? You glance at Kyoko, checking to see if she herself heard Misaka - and to your chagrin, the Eversor seemingly isn't all that worried, refilling her own glass with the second bottle.

"Ah, what're ya lookin' at me like that for, Murderface?" Kyoko asks after a moment, grumbling. "What, you're going to take what she said seriously? Look at her, she's passed out! I bet it was some sorta...drunken...talking and stuff! She does science, you know how sciencey folk can get!"

You're not that optimistic. You gently lay Misaka down on the cushion, resting her head on your thighs, and you carefully peel her eyes open, one after the other.

But still...

It's then that you take off Misaka's other shoe and throw it at Kyoko, knocking the glass out of her hand. Kyoko blinks at this, and opens her mouth to yell at you - but you immediately tell her to shut up and listen.

You're sober. Painfully so. And it's then that you tell her, in clipped tones, about the Golden Weapons and what you think they do.

"W-what? Those...those things? You mean, your Desert Eagle, a-and Kirika's sword? Those things drive you crazy, like...mass murderer crazy, that sort?"

You nod. You believe that the sword was the cause for Kirika going rogue, no matter how Kyuubey spins it. It's then that she glances at her newly-decorated spear, her one eye wide.

"G-goddamn. And I thought it was just being cool and stuff..."

You repeat your order as you gently let Misaka rest on the cushion, before you yourself stand up and pace around the warehouse. Scrolling your app screen until you bring up your diary. You tap it, and it asks you for a five-letter password.

What password do you enter?

Kirika went into full arrogant crazy murder mode, and Pinky became a sentient god-witch. The golden weapons may be vital to whatever Pinky is planning, but they may also be an integral part of subverting whatever world-shaking event is in the works as well.

We're getting a hold of Mami and Sayaka to explain about Pinky, right?

This would also make a good opportunity to try and improve things with Mami, explain to her that it wasn't just because of the retirement assignment, that the sword Kirika had gotten from Pinky was making her dangerous and crazy, and that it's because of Mami (and not just because of the pancakes) that we aren't going the same way.

I agree. Deculture's art is good stuff. Although a suggestion, if I may be so bold: since it appears we're going to be collecting those bloody golden banes, maybe a reminder of the ones we have in the photo would be nice. Chiaki is carrying the Gold Desert Eagle, but maybe a bar on the bottom of the image with little gold VIII and XX on it. Or something.

I think they were Pinky.
Remember when we called the number they came from we heard screaming and shooting. That turned out being the noise from a few minutes in the future

Not many people can fuck with things like that but Pinky could easily

See I think Faust isn't just a witch but a sort of amalgamation of witches, it has these powerful witches feeding it and they have their own personalities. One of which is Pinky who has sort of free reign for now while Faust is dormant (?) and is trying to set things up so that when she awakens she will be killed

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you are very sober at the moment. You were enjoying a very pleasant buzz just a few minutes earlier, though, courtesy of two bottles of vodka and your own Soul Gem swimming in the stuff.

It's always hard to deal with things when a horrific black-eyed nightmare in a pink dress suddenly decides to harsh on your buzz, just like that.

You flick away the cigarette you've smoked down to its filter, but not before using its dying embers to light another in its place. Your arms dealer and current drinking partner, a small girl named Misaka, is currently drooling into your skirt, sleeping the sleep of the blessed. Your other drinking partner, erstwhile cyclops and Eversor Sakura Kyoko, is busy screaming at her girlfriend over the phone.

You've unlocked two entries from your mysterious diary application on your new cellphone. The first entry was talking about some sort of armor, you guess that it's the one you have Misaka working on. The second is...just a bit more disturbing to recount, urging you to go on a fetchquest to end the world before someone else does. You'd like to unlock the others, but the app itself has been disabled temporarily, strangely enough.

It's times like this you wish you could say that you've been drinking a bit too much, but you're not. Not at the moment anyway.

You are now currently trying to get your fellow Magical Girls together and alert them about the dangers of the golden weapons that a certain pink-haired someone is trying to foist off you and other magical girls. You believe that these weapons, while decidedly stylish and more powerful than their non-gold versions, happen to drive their wielders completely and totally insane.

IYou've seen it happen to someone already, and you had to deal with them the only way you knew how. You've seen it happen to yourself firsthand, too, although you managed not to get carried away. With luck, it may not even happen to you as it did to Kure.

No such luck. Not for you, not in this universe. No luck at all.

By your watch, it's around four in the afternoon, approaching evening.

What do you do? Calling Mami is an option, but you're not so sure you should remind her about what happened to Kirika, even if it is just to warn her. Maybe you should give her some time to deal with it first? Kyuubey is also an option - he'd want to know what Misaka had just said. Keeping your diary's contents to yourself seems to be a good idea, though.

Oh damn is it that time of day already?
I guess we should head home. Iori will be back soon right? We can call Mami on the way.

>> ☐ Anonymous 07/09/12(Mon)08:35 No.19803331

Call Mami to the meeting as well. No sense in her being flipped to Pinky's cause because we want to spare her feelings.

Call Kyuubey. He's got the weapons now anyway, and meeting in a secure location to talk about potentially sensitive stuffs seems like a good idea.
Start off by telling him about Misaka, and asking if such a meeting would be a good idea.

Continue to pet Misaka while we make some calls.

Call Kyuubey, inform him of Misaka's drunken but still rather prophetic sounding statement about the missing pieces and ending the world before she does.

Then we'll call up all the Magical Girl Gang against Golden Weapons and have us all meet and our place for an information session on what they are, what their purpose is and a vow to not fucking use weapons that turn you bugfuck crazy.

Logical leap, we already know that our shield has time powers, we could deduce that fixing it would bring them back to full force and perhaps allow options aside from time stop. Given that we were told to destroy the world it is not a leap to assume that it is through this medium that we would "destroy the world".

>>19803339
Hold on, he may want to hold Misaka in quarantine and perhaps see just what corruption by Pinky does. We can't do that to Misaka or any of the others. At the very least, we need to discuss what happened with Mami, Kyoko, Sayaka, and Misaka. Shit, throw in Iori too, seeing as it appears you don't need to be a magical girl for Pinky to do her thing.

>>19803352
Telling Kyuubey about Misaka is definitely a bad idea. Although he is kinda reasonable in this setting you have to remember he is a fucking asshole that cares only about his objectives.
We don't want Misaka to become a potential liability for him.

Depends on how close Deculture sticks to the source material. Homura's shield could time-stop and time travle backwards by about one month to a specific date once all the time stop sand inside the shield moved from one gem to the other.

Chiaki's shield, on the other hand, we don't know luch about aside frok the fact that the last time we tried to use it it didn't work and Kirika nearly took our face off because of that...

It was suggested last thread that if Sayaka is preoccupied, we might let her finish her mission. Then gather again for a second meeting. Or tell her ourselves afterwards along with other people whom Sayaka is likely to believe.

She IS in the middle of a mission, after all. She may really need that extra grief seed or stuff, and a distraction may prove to be very inconvenient for her.

You hold off on calling Kyuubey for now, and dial Mami's number instead. By your last conversation in the Officio, you know that contact between the both of you is going to be a bit...strained. Much more when what you'll be talking to her about is what led to you retiring Kirika in the first place.

She picks up after the third ring, and you could hear both her and another voice - Iori - talking excitedly about something. You smile a little, hoping that her current mood would ease your conversation with her a bit - but her voice turns a bit subdued as she finally greets you.

"Yes? Chiaki-san, can I help you?"

...Wishful thinking.

You greet her a moment later as you glance down on the still-sleeping Misaka, running your fingers through her hair every now and then. You get what sounds like a purring sound from the somnolent arms dealer as you do so. It's then, too, that you manage to pluck up the courage to tell her about the meeting, cringing inwardly at how you imagine yourself sounding like.

"...Alright," Mami replies coolly as you finish. "Iori-chan and I are on our way back to your apartment, in any case. Let's all meet there so I can here what you have to say."

Well, at least she didn't yell at you or something, right?

You bid her goodbye, and she does so, as well. You wait for her to remind you to be careful, but it never comes, replaced instead with the buzz of a dead line.

You place the smartphone back into your inventory as you look towards Kyoko, letting out a sigh. It seems that she's just about finished talking to Sayaka as well, and she blinks her one good eye at you.

This was going to be a long night.

Exactly half an hour later, all three of you are piled inside a cab headed to your apartment. Misaka has unfortunately been asleep the entire time you carried her in your arms, letting the girl snooze as Kyoko grumbled her way through cleaning up (and locking up) the massive armory that is Warehouse #0069. Kyoko has graciously volunteered to sit shotgun while you and Misaka take the back seat, the arms dealer pillowing her head on your thighs as she stretches out.

It's still a ways to your apartment, and with dusk settling in, the rush-hour traffic will probably get you there long after night had already fallen. By then Mami, Iori and Sayaka would already be waiting for you, which suits you just fine.

Kyoko is still grumbling about her screaming match with Sayaka, angrily chomping on an unlit cigarette.

You stare briefly out the passenger door window, looking at all the people living their lives out. Sometimes you wish you were just like them, in a way. Just a normal girl who should probably be worrying about boys and didn't drink like a fish just to feel relatively normal.

The funny thing is, you were probably just like that, once. You don't remember, but there's a good chance.

The horrible thing about it is that you've gotten so used to this life that you actually don't think you can adjust back.

You turn to look at your companion - or rather, the back of her head that's not obscured by her seat's headrest.

Well, any case. There's be en something that's been nagging at you ever since you saw it. You've wanted to ask questions about it, but somehow the chance always seemed to slip past, other options becoming more important.

You ask Sakura Kyoko about her eyepatch, in the crudest way possible.

"So are you just lazy about getting your eye healed, or do you just want to look cool?"

"Huh?" Kyoko blinks, turning in her seat to glance at you. "What the hell are you-- oh, you mean this?" She taps the lashed tsuba covering her left eye. "Yeah, uh...um. This is just between the both of us, okay, Murderface? I mean, you know, I can trust you to keep a secret, right? Like from Sayaka and the rest?"

You nod after a moment. You've never really been close to Kyoko, but she'd always made the effort to be jovial, even friendly towards you. You haven't officially returned your feelings regarding that matter, but it seems to suit the both of you just fine, this unspoken agreement.

"Well, you remember how I got this, right? Sparring match with Kirika. Live weapons and all that. It was supposed to be a sorta exhibition for the newbies, too. I tried not to get carried away like I always do, but apparently Kirika wanted to send a message." She gesticulates with a sideways hand-chop. "Horizontal slash, eye level. The kinda cut that takes the top off your victim's skull and flings it like a frisbee. Barely managed to dodge it, and cut right through the bridge of my nose and my left eye. Bled an entire MESS on the training mats, enough that some of the newbies started faintin' and screamin'."

You remember that, all right. Right after that cut, Kirika turned towards you and pointed her blood-soaked sword - not yet golden, then - at you, in a challenge.

"But I got it healed up. The rest of the damage. But..." She pulls the tsuba up, revealing...nothing. Not even a scar, just skin where the eye should be, as if it never were. "Somethin' about the wound didn't want the magic regenerating the rest of the damage. So Kyuubey just patched things up the best he could."

Kyoko shrugs. "Would've made for a neat scar, though, but I think this is better. The patch makes me look more hardcore, anyway." She turns to grin at you, but you have the feeling that there's more to it than that.

You agree that using a tsuba as an eyepatch is pretty awesome, though. Super awesome.

"Y-yeah, you think so too?" Kyoko's smile turns into a grin, her cheeks flushing pink as she turns to face you again. "Ah, why the tsuba? It's...well, my grandfather on my mother's side had a really old sword, and he gave it to mom, but she never really got to take care of it. I found the sword disassembled in our family attic. Can't really do anything about the blade, so I just took this one with me instead."

Kyoko leans back on her seat, just as the first few drops of rain start to fall against the windshield - and the both of you roll up the windows as the driver switches on the air conditioning.

"After everything else that happened, I kept this tsuba with me as a good luck charm. Was planning to melt it down and make a ring or something out of it, but after Kirika cut my eye out, I thought I'd be like Yagyu Jubei and use it." She looks back at you to grin again. "Cool, huh?"

Yeah. Real cool.

You ask her another question. About Sayaka, this time. You heard the both of them screaming over the phone, earlier. Should you be worried?

"Huh? Oh, nah. That's how we usually talk. Although, well, in public, anyway. In private we do that thing where we call each other baby-talk names'n such. It'll make you sick, frankly." Kyoko laughs. "But uh, she does kinda get a bit snippy whenever she's on an assignment. Well, you can understand her, I mean, who likes getting a phone call while you're in the middle of a purge?"

You probably wouldn't appreciate it, either, you agree. You follow up this line of questioning by asking Kyoko about what they do between the sheets.

Kyoko is silent for a moment before going completely red.

"T-that's..." The Eversor mumbles. "--not something I'm entirely comfortable talking about, Murderface. Not comfortable at all. L-let's talk about something else, okay?"

You smile slightly as you gently scritch Misaka's scalp, before smoothening out her hair as she continues to sleep on your lap.

You let this questioning go. You tried, anyway.

"Well, what about you, then, Murderface? Why you gotta drink so much?" Kyoko suddenly asks. "I mean, sure, getting buzzed after a few assignment's not that bad, I do it myself, but...it's like you're tryin' to kill your liver before you're even legal enough to do so. And painkillers? "Well, uh...nowhere in particular. Just...I never thought I'd end up so close to a retirement gig, you know?" Kyoko says after a moment, and you see her look down on her hands. "I mean, you got the pick of the assignments, right? What if you picked the assignment I got instead, and I got to go up against the bitch who took my eye out? And...and supposing I won, what if I took that damn sword of hers and got driven crazy like she did? You know?"

This is the first time you've heard Kyoko talk like this. Hell, this is probably the first time the both of you had talked like this. As far as you remember, anyway.

"I know it's a bit stupid to think about things like that, but sometimes you can't help but think. And I worry sometimes about Sayaka. I mean, she's got a real hair trigger temper, an' she'll probably get into heaps of trouble if I'm not around anymore..."

You reach over and pat her shoulder, before giving it a squeeze. You try to reassure her, as best as you could given the circumstances, that you'd do as she asked. Hell, you'd even fabricate the evidence if it came to that.

"Thanks, Chiaki." Kyoko seems to relax under your grip, a sigh escaping her lips. "That...that means a lot. And yeah, I'll do the same for you, if it ever comes to that. Which I'm hoping it won't, but life is a bitch, ain't it?"

It is, indeed.

Outside, the rain continues to pour. Beating against the cab's roof, a quick stacatto beat that slowly lulls you into sleep.

"Yeah, better get some shuteye while you can, Murderface. We're still some time from your pad, anyhow." Kyoko's jovial tone is back. "I'll wake you up when you're there."

You fall asleep, and wake up for what seems to be moments later to Kyoko shaking your shoulder gently from outside. The cab seems to have already stopped right in front of your apartment building. You mumble something about paying, and Kyoko stops you, saying she already took care of it. You nod dumbly, sleep still muddling you up, and you clumsily wipe drool from the corner of your lips before reaching down with both hands and lifting the still-snoozing Misaka into your arms.

The cab is sent off as the three of you make your way to your apartment, which is at the fifth floor of this particular building. The elevator ride is uneventful enough, and the door to your apartment opens quickly as Kyoko gives it a few short raps with her knuckle, the multiple locks behind it being undone rather clumsily but speedily enough.

Mami is the first to greet you as the door swings open. She's still in the office lady clothes you've seen her in this morning at the Officio, complete with black armband - but she's in a decidedly better mood. "Ah, Kyoko-chan, Chiaki-san. Come in, you're just in time. Iori-san and I have just finished making dinner." She blinks at the sleeping girl in your arms. "...What happened to Misaka-chan? She looks a bit tired, and--" It's then that she steps closer and gives all three of you a sniff. "Have you three been drinking...?"

Both you and Kyoko glance at each other, speechless - before Kyoko pipes up, seemingly thinking quickly for the both of you. "J-just a bit! I brought some vodka coolers for Murderface and Misaka here. Western brand, tastes a bit fruity but almost no alcohol at all! Really!" She gives her widest smile, which for Kyoko doesn't look really comforting at all - but Mami seems to buy it, nodding after a moment and smiling.

"Well, I'm glad it's not another one of someone's binge drinking, but vodka coolers are still unhealthy." She glances pointedly at you, and you can't help but look down and feel just a bit ashamed. "You three had better get in. Chiaki-san, I'll take Misaka. Better for her to sleep it off in a futon."

You nod as you hand off Misaka to Mami, your hands touching briefly. Mami takes no notice of this as she hauls the arms dealer into her arms, before turning around and walking back into your apartment.

You exchange glances with Kyoko again, and bump fists quietly, before stepping inside and taking off your shoes, closing the door behind you.

"Sayaka in yet?" The red-haired Eversor asks loudly.

Mess is an understatement, you think as you glance at the wastebin near the shoe rack - it's half-full of wadded-up tissues red with blood. Probably Sayaka wiping the worst of the blood off her boots before stepping into the apartment proper.

At least Iori didn't seem to be scared of seeing a bloody magical girl ringing up in front for a visit. In fact, the idol seems to be in good spirits, fussing over what looks like two rather bulky-looking packages, wrapped in expensive paper, sitting right on your favorite chair. She smiles at you as you approach.

"Ah, welcome back, Chiaki-san." Iori positively beams at you in greeting, and you mumble something in reciprocation. You're not used to being greeted in that manner - you usually come home to an early apartment.

"I helped Mami-san make dinner today!"

That's...that's great. You're not sure how to respond to that, except ask her if she made you pancakes.

The second post is us looking at the shoe rack and bin and seeing bloody tissues. Then we guess that she is cleaning the rest of the blood off herself since Sayaka unlike us keeps clean more regularly

There's a small jump, but it doesn't feel like a missing post, just glossing over us sitting down.

It works, she says that mess is an understatement when referring to the giant pile of bloody stuff in the wastebin. It is perhaps not the optimum phrasing but it works.

While it was not explicitly stated that Sayaka in the main text it is made clear by the decision boxes.

You glance at the packages again, severely tempted to ask Iori what's inside the ominous packaging - but you focus on her smiling at you instead, working up a small one of your own. You thank her for going to the effort of making you dinner, even if she didn't have to for the second time.

"Oh, it's alright, Chiaki-san!" She smiles, seemingly quite proud of herself. "I rarely do get a chance to cook for other people, so it was quite the experience!"

You're...you're sure it's going to be delicious, you manage to decipher from Kyoko's silent hand signals, the Eversor standing a few ways behind Iori, hidden from the idol's view. She probably saw you floundering, and decided to help out.

You owe her one, you think as she gives you a triumphant thumbs up.

"A-ah, I'm...I hope you do like it, Chiaki-san. I made the dinner for you, after all." She says, cheeks faintly pink.

You open your mouth to reply when you hear a door slamming shut from somewhere within your apartment - and out comes Sayaka in nothing but a towel and a frown, scrubbing at her blue hair. "Ergh, it took a while to get all the blood out..." She blinks at you, her frown easing slightly. "Hey, Murderface. I used your bath, Mami said it was okay.

Cleaned up afterwards though, so you don't complain."

You shrug at this. That is the extent of your communication with Miki Sayaka, who then turns towards Kyoko. You see it right away - she's still frowning, but she's glad to see the Eversor.

"Well, we're all here, any case." Sayaka says after a moment. "What was so important you had to call me up in the middle of a purge, Murderface?"

Our first meeting with her at the bar with Kyoko, the assignment with Iori and getting the golden deagle, hearing about the golden sword Kirika had and asking her about it at the yakuza bar. Things devolve from there with the flesh of fallen angels, and even Mami bore witness to what Kirika had become. Our eyes starting to go black when we threatened Sayaka, and the voice telling us to kill both Kirika and Mami, which is why we tossed the deagle aside before the fight. Then we tell them what QB has said about a grief seed the size of a planet, and how he thinks they may be connected. Then, our incident with Misaka while drinking...coolers...yeah, coolers.

"I didn't buy that gun, it was given to me. Some girl with pink hair and black eyes. Kyuubey calls her Faust. Sayaka, you saw me that time. My eyes were black. I have reason this girl, Faust or Pinky, is handing out these weapons and they make people go insane. QB can back me up on this.

"They also have roman numerals marked on them. My gun was marked VIII, Kirika's katana was marked XX. That means there's 18 more. So, if you see Pinky, don't talk to her. Don't use strange golden weapons she seems to hand out."

There's this pink-haired girl invading people's minds, at first she just talks to you, but there will be a point where she offers you help, in the form of a golden weapon suiting your personal preference. Mine was a Desert Eagle, Kure's was a katana. Problem is, using these weapons... well, it drives you slowly insane. Your eyes, they turn black and you will be at risk of being consumed by rage. Sayaka, you'll remember that. I'm sorry about that time. The reason I had to retire Kure was because she succumbed to it. I gave both weapons to QB for research and safekeeping. As such, my warning is two-fold. Don't ever talk to an imaginary pink-haired girl, and don't ever accept or use any golden weapons, from her, or anyone else just in case. I should also mention that the weapons are marked with roman numerals, but what they mean i have yet to find out. y gun was marked VIII, Kirika's katana was marked XX. That means there's at least 18 more. Ask QB about this if you still think this is crazy, he'll confirm it."

As soon as you finish your explanation - one you felt was one of the better times you explained something, despite just how utterly unbelievable it is even to you, and you're the one saying it - silence falls over the entire apartment like a thick blanket, broken only by Misaka's even breathing, the arms dealer curled up in the middle of your double futon beside your favorite chair.

You expected Sayaka to laugh, and Mami to quietly shake her head in dismay at your trying to worm your way out of trouble with lies and deceit. Hell, if someone spun the same yarn on you you'd throw them out for wasting your time.

That hasn't happened yet, so maybe that's a good sign.

It's Mami who speaks first. She seems to be calm, but her shivering hands belie her true state at the moment.

"So...Chiaki-san, you're saying that a Witch is behind this? A powerful one preying upon

You nod at this, not really sure on what to say to try and press the veracity of her words.

"And...Kirika-san was the first victim? That was why you had to retire her, Chiaki-san?"

"I'd believe it." Sayaka says after a moment, her arms crossed underneath her chest. "So that's why your eyes turned black then. Had to admit, I was convinced you'd bow my brains out the back of my head when I saw that golden peashooter of yours." She shakes her head. "Christ, Murderface. You scared me then."

Kyoko blinks at this. "H-hey, what did you do? Murderface, did you point a gun at Sayaka...?"

You nod. You explain that it wasn't really your fault, but the gun's. You stopped yourself just in time, though, and that counts. Doesn't it?

"Y-yeah, but--" Kyoko is clearly torn at the discovery of this tidbit. Torn between her friendship with you, and you basically being inches away from venting her girlfriend's brains with a trigger pull. "Murderface, why didn't you--"

"It's not her fault, Kyoko-chan." Mami cuts in. "I had my suspicions about the sword when Kirika-san started favoring it, but..." She shakes her head, mournfully. "I should've known there was something strange about that thing. And now it's too late..."

You don't know what to say about that, and the entire apartment falls silent once more. Sayaka speaks up again after a while, however.

"So, wait. Just now, Misaka said something in a trance about these golden weapons? Like you have to collect them all, or something? What for?"

". . ." You don't know how to say THAT particular kind of information without appearing to be a complete and total risk to everyone, so you just shrug, saying that it was just that you had to gather them. Kyoko blinks at you, but says nothing.

"Well, I don't care what Witch it is, but if she's got designs on me or anything, she's got another thing coming." Sayaka scoffs. "I just have to make sure that I don't get into any faustian deals by accepting any golden crap, right? I mean, besides Kyuubey, of course. Same goes for Mami and Kyoko too, right?"

You nod. That's basically it.

"Alright. That seems easy enough." Sayaka smirks. "Could've just told us through text or something, Murderface. If I didn't know any better, I'd say you actually give a shit about somebody else other than yourself."

How do you respond?

"I guess there really is a first time for everything." Sayaka shrugs, still smirking. "Don't think this changes anything, though. If Kyuubey asks me to punch your ticket, you won't even know what hit you until your severed head finally rolls to a stop in front of me.

It's now Kyoko's turn to frown. "Hey, Sayaka, that's a bit too much--"

Sayaka holds up a hand. "It's the same courtesy I'd extend to you, Kyoko, and the same one I'd want extended to me, too. Unlike Murderface here who had to get other people involved, but since that's over I won't mention it again." There's a flash of brilliant blue light as she transforms, her cape falling about her shoulders as her Magical Girl costume manifests on her body. She tosses Kyoko her towel. "Meet you back at the apartment. I need to be debriefed and get the payment from Kyuubey."

"A-ah...alright." Kyoko nods. "Take it easy, alright?" She calls uncertainly after Sayaka, who leaves without a word, cape billowing out behind her. You're tempted to step on the hem to try and trip her, but that'd ruin her exit.

The front door slamming close marks her departure from your apartment, leaving you, Mami, Kyoko and Iori to listen to Misaka's snoring in the most awkward silence in your life.

Quick. Do something.

You're not the touchy-feely sort, and you never will be, but you know an emergency when you see one. No thanks to Sakaya, in any case. Clasping a hand on Kyoko's shoulder and giving a squeeze, it's then that you turn to Iori (who'd been quiet all this time) about the packages sitting in your favorite chair.

"Oh, these!" Iori brightens up palpably, as if glad to be able to talk about something she actually knows. "W-well, erm...I don't know if Kyuubey-san had already told you, Chiaki-san, but I hired you for another assignment. It's...it's really nothing dangerous, since it's going to be a strictly a black tie event and there's a lot of security, but Kyuubey said if I have to go, I should go with a proper escort. He said he didn't know anyone better than you to handle it, so..." She smiles and unwraps both packages - revealing what looks to be a black butler's uniform AND a maid uniform, the formal sort with the long skirt.

"Kyuubey-san said that you didn't have any dresses and that you'd need a proper disguise to be able to escort me in person, so I had these made." You could hear Kyoko's muffled laughter beside you as you look down at the costumes. "T-they're to your exact size, so they'll definitely fit - I didn't know what you'd pick so I decided to have both made, just in case." Iori smiles uncertainly. "Chiaki-san? Um, why is your eyebrow twitching like that...?"

Iori frowns at this. "I was hoping she'd pick the butler, but...Chiaki-san in a maid costume...?" You could almost hear the gears in her brain click together, concocting visuals you have no plan of making into reality. "Hey, that isn't too bad..."

Alright, I think this is a good place to pause!

I'll reveal which costume Chiaki chooses in the next thread.

Thank you for participating, everyone! I apologize once more for the lack of action in these past threads. It will be resolved soon enough.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a magical girl, and you don't think this is very funny. No, not funny at all.

It has been an entire week since Kirika Kure's retirement. A job messily done, but done with all of the same. You had dealt with the aftermath as best you could - taking those who helped you into a vodka victory party, and tried to help those still trying to recover from the incident by playing the costumed fool for their amusement (and to your chagrin). You even managed to deal with a certain arms dealer's confusion as to why she woke up in your apartment by sharing your morning breakfast of pancakes, your personal ambrosia baked by your personal blonde goddess of fortune and salvation.

Wounds heal. Hearts piece themselves back together. All it takes is time, and in your case, time AND a foot-high stack of feather-light, fluffy, melt-in-your-mouth pancakes still hot from the pan. Just enough syrup to sweeten things, and butter to balance the flavors.

Certainly a better alternative to your usual restorative of room temperature Kong whisky and a handful of 600 mg Interfectum, or at least your body likes to think so.

The week itself had mostly been uneventful. With Iori having purchased your services, you've been taken off the duty rotation - as such, you didn't need to check in every day with Kyuubey to find out if you were to be assigned someplace else. Iori and Mami seemed to have hit it off pretty well, and they've been going out nearly every day.

A good thing, considering it helps avoid the inherent awkwardness of being in the same room as you. They've tried to drag you along, but you've always feigned a hangover or sleep whenever, or just begged off and said that you felt really tired. And sometimes you did, too - a tiredness that somehow won't go away no matter what you did.

Iori would give you her disappointed look, but she'd simply walk over and give you a hug. Mami would do the same, but you feel that her hugs felt...impersonal, somehow. Even if you two were back to talking terms. They would then leave, leaving you alone for the entire day - days you spent watching television while drinking, or being visited by Kyoko to hear the sort of antics she'd been getting to in her assignments. Near the end of the week, you visited Misaka. She's fine, no sign of the outburst she had - and busy working on the armor. She's taken to calling it Tiny Pete, which confuses you utterly.

But it will never be as confusing as you wearing an actual maid uniform.

While three members of your ever-dwindling social circle - excluding your Principal, and she was now your Principal again, of course - stand in the same room as you, Mami and Misaka fussing about every detail of your horrific costume, while Kyoko is trying her level best not to laugh.

If only Pinky could see you now.

Did Kyubey do something about getting us new appartment? Old one might have been comprimised by Yakuzas (because Kiriko was a bit too friendly with them). The fact than none dared to come visit (probably because of what you did with Kiriko), doesn't mean we are safe here. Besides, it's easier to move to new place than to tidy up this one.

Also - any info on how's Emi doing? Did QB take her on your agency?

Any did he find out anything about golden weapons?

Heck, let's call Kyubey for some news.

It is currently early evening, 6:00 PM exactly. The event you are to attend with your Principal, Minase Iori, is a private gala-cum-album launch of 765 Production Studios, at a very fancy and very upscale mansion in the Upper District of Mitakihara. The very cream of the crop will be going. You haven't been there personally to scope it out because...well, because they don't allow just riffraff in, even if you tried. You'd have to play this by ear, be a reactive presence. That should annoy you, and it does, but you in this getup annoys you too much for it to be a factor.

"Now, hold still, Chiaki-san. I have to make sure your maid hairband is on straight." Mami says, smiling as she comes up behind you, hands carefully adjusting the damnable frilly thing in your hair for the tenth time.

You'll be alone with Iori in this one. You had suggested that Kyoko wear the butler costume as backup, and she'd been amenable to it - but for some strange reason, only one companion is allowed. Security reasons, Iori had given as the event holder's explanation. Well, that certainly pares down how many people you'd need to kill if this ends up ass-upwards.

It's a fine picture you make, arms akimbo in front of a full body mirror, as Misaka and Mami do their best to make you as presentable as possible. Mami had already spent most of the day getting you scrubbed clean - to the point that your entire body feels raw. She hadn't been too gentle with the scrubbing. Or the shampooing. Or the soaping. Everything else, really, and she had you crunching altoids before washing your mouth out with half a bottle of Listerine.

You are so cleaned up it hurts, and you scowl at your reflection.

Kyuubey had better pay tons for this shit.

In contrast to you, Iori seems to be having quite the easy time with her dress - well, there's not really MUCH of it that you can call a dress, really. A sheer black gown, backless, with silk black gloves reaching up above the elbow, black heels. A tasteful black lacy ribbon tying her hair into an elegant ponytail. The neckline is a bit too plunging for your taste, but...it's her choice. She's your boss. You're just here for the ride.

"Chiaki-san, I'm really sorry," Iori says, an apologetic smile on her face as she walks in with that stunning dress on. "If...if you really don't want to, I can just come alone, I'll be alright--"

You shake your head after a moment of staring at her, not noticing that you have been staring. You close your mouth and shake your head, before turning away. You're not about to abandon an assignment just because you got prissy over some clothes. You're a professional, first and foremost. You're chill. You can get through anything. You--

"Wah! Let Misaka see, let Misaka see!" Misaka nearly drops the flashbangs she'd been hooking up to a discreet harness under your skirt, and you scowl as they both start to giggle at Kyoko's cellphone. "Ahahaha! Is perfect! How you say, tsuntsun in a sea of jelly!"

You start to move, but Mami holds you in place. "Chiaki-san, please. I can't finish with you moving around too much." She chides, and you feel her breath on her neck. "Anyway, how does the entire thing feel?"

How do you respond?

"You'll be fine." Mami replies, smoothing your lapels, picking at imaginary bits of lint from your shoulders. "Maid uniforms take a bit of getting used to. It takes a while, but after a few hours you'll learn to cope." You feel her tighten the ribbon securing your apron around your waist. "Now, remember, you're going with Iori-san as her maid. You'll speak only when spoken to, you'll fetch her drinks and finger food if she asks for it, and you always follow three steps behind her. Under no circumstances are you to take the dress off, or leave her alone - unless she's dancing with someone, of course, and then you stand quietly out of the dance floor. Understood?"

You nod. Surprisingly, Mami knows a lot about being a maid.

"Don't give me that look, Chiaki-san. I've done something similar to this. Well, part time in a maid cafe, anyway." She smiles, before blinking as she realizes she's said something that she didn't mean to say. "U-um, for the experience, of course!"

Yes. For the experience.

That's basically what you have to do, in any case. Act as guardian and servant to Minase Iori - your principal, who's currently looking at Kyoko's stolen snapshot of you, and begging the Eversor to share it with her. Misaka, on the other hand, seems to have gotten over the novelty of seeing you with such an expression on your face, and she continues to hide as much 'equipment' in your dress as she can.

"If anything happens, don't be afraid to use what we're equipping you with." Mami says after a moment as she gives Misaka a holstered MK22 tranquilizer pistol, its silencer detached and placed in its slot in the holster itself. This Misaka hooks behind your apron ribbon, which is deliberately oversized enough to conceal it. na

"Your last resort is to transform. Your first priority there is to get out with Iori-san safely. Take anyone down if they're in the way, but try and keep casualties to a minimum. Alright, Chiaki-san?"

You nod, sighing slightly. There goes some well-needed stress relief.

"Aw, I'm not so sure what you're so glum about, Murderface!" Kyoko guffaws as she gets off of your favorite chair, standing in front of you. "You look kinda cute in that getup! Kinda decent!" She grins, her canines poking out. "Hey, since you're a maid, you should try to be a bit more maid-like!" It's then that she points towards the kitchen. "Make me a sandwich!"

You open your mouth to retort when you hear a familiarly annoying voice in your head - and a familiar white mutant cat hopping into your apartment via an open window.

"Ah. Matsuda. I'm glad you're taking your role very seriously as Minase's domestic helper." Kyuubey says as it walks forward, as if the damn thing owned the place. Iori seems to shrink slightly at its appearance, but nods at Kyuubey in greeting. "Mami. Kyoko. Misaka." The last one mentioned seems to frown at Kyuubey, before reaching out and grabbing the Incubator's tail - which slips out of her grasp only a split second before her fingers could close around it, eliciting a frustrated noise from the arms dealer.

"Very well." Kyuubey nods as it sits down on its haunches, tail flicking from side to side - managing to avoid Misaka's multiple grasping attempts, before the arms dealer finally stomps off in annoyance, clearly fuming. "Through intensive analysis, I've come to some very interesting conclusions. This may be a bit long-winded, but please bear with me."

You'll bear with it, all right. Just as you're bearing with the uncomfortably frilly underwear you're wearing under the heavy starched skirts. Did maids really wear black frilly panties WITH garterbelts?

Kyuubey makes a small noise, akin to clearing its throat, before it starts. "As they are, the golden weapons seem to be unremarkable. Both of them can be disassembled into their component parts easily, and snap together just as easily without issues. Identified chemically, they are made up of the same material as their non-golden counterparts. Perfectly identical, down to the very last molecule. Nothing extraordinary - except, of course, when you use them."

Kyuubey places a forepaw on the floor, a circle of light etching itself on the marble, and it's then that the Golden Desert Eagle manifests in that circle itself, complete with a white snakeskin holster.

"Think of it like a...secret weapon in a videogame. Everything else is normal about it, except for a few parameters. It hits harder, it reloads faster, and it doesn't seem to jam no matter what we do. The same with the sword - it cuts with a molecule-thin edge, and it doesn't seem to dull no matter what we cut with it." Kyuubey looks at you. "We used machinery to do these tests, of course, so there's no risk of corruption."

It's then that the Incubator nods. "Which brings me to my next point. Matsuda, you're right. These things ARE dangerous, and they do corrupt. I would say, given the limited information I have now, that the golden sword itself may have corrupted Kirika. I've been looking at her Soul Gem readings for the past month. Her gem was past the point of recovery, and she had never used a grief seed ever since she registered the sword as her personal weapon. She should have expired long ago, but yet we know how she was when you retired her."

Ah. "Expired." Yet another term to soften the blow of a colleague turning into a Witch. That was part and parcel of the job, and many of your fellow magical girls have taken great pains to ensure that they don't end up that way.

Mami is silent as you gesture for Kyuubey to continue.

"But there's one thing I would like to request for you to do, Matsuda. You see, I have to know, first, how these weapons corrupt their intended wielders. I checked your Soul Gem rating at the time period when you said you had an outburst involving Sayaka, and I was surprised to see that your Soul Gem did not fluctuate at all - unlike Kirika's, whose Soul Gem purity plummeted moments after receiving the sword. As such, I am asking you to carry and use this firearm for the duration of your assignment tonight."

He pushes the holstered gun towards you, and you have the sudden compulsion to pick it up and holster it as soon as possible.

"There should be no danger if it's just one night, Matsuda. If it comes to that, I will personally supply you with enough Grief Seeds to cleanse your Soul Gem. Right now, I have a theory to test out, and if it works, we are a step closer into finding out just what are these weapons intended for."

You glance down at the holstered firearm on the floor, looking so innocent and harmless in its rather fetching white snakeskin holster. No, it's not calling out to you to pick it up. That would be weird. That would be insane. What you do feel is everyone's stares aimed directly at you, boring into you - Iori, Mami, Kyoko, Misaka, and that damn mutant cat. Watching what you would do, what you would decide to do. Examining your every move, even if what you've only done is basically breathe.

A moment, and it's then that you bend down, cursing all the while, to pick it up. It's heavy, as you remember it, and startlingly cold, even through the cotton gloves that the maid uniform came with. It's securely fitted into the holster, along with an extra magazine. What little of it peeking out from the holster is gleaming warmly - and you have to close your eyes for a moment as you realize that you've been staring a bit too much.

You open your eyes again, and you see Kyuubey looking up at you. His expression hasn't changed a bit, but you've got the funniest feeling that he's looking at you with extreme smugness.

You make to slip your arm through the holster's shoulder straps - you'd have to carry it unconcealed - when it's then that Kyoko's voice rings out.

"H-hey, are you sure about this? Murderface?"

You stop in your tracks, and you glance at the source of voice. Kyoko.

Make sure our soul-gem is freshly purged before the start of the mission. Take a dose of something emotion-killing, like anti-depressants. We don't wanna get all agressive. If it doesn't help it won't hurt in any case.

Also bring a flask of strong drink we can dump our soulgem in so we don't have to be seen drinking. Just in case.

Kyoko opens her mouth to protest, but seems to think the better of it - grudgingly nodding, but still quite worried. "I-I don't like it, but fine. It's your decision, Murderface, but if you think I'm going to let you carry some sort of demonic weapon without support, you've got another thing coming." She snarls as she walks forward, nearly stepping on Kyuubey as she goes past you - snatching the butler uniform from its box stashed beside you. "I'll be her second. On my own time." The red-haired Eversor spits at Kyuubey, as if daring him to protest. She stomps off towards the apartment bathroom, evidently to clean up and get ready.

"It's your decision, Sakura Kyoko. Just remember that you will not be reimbursed for your efforts here."

"I DON'T GIVE A SHIT." Kyoko shouts, just as you hear the shower door slam shut. Soon, the sound of flowing water breaks the silence.

"Very well. It seems Sakura Kyoko has opted to include herself in this assignment. Minase Iori, I trust this won't be too much of a hassle?"

Iori shakes her head, blinking, seemingly stunned at the turn of events. "N-no, Kyuubey-san, I think I'll be able to deal with this. Worst comes to worst, I can always say that Kyoko-san is my chauffeur. She can stay by the car until we need help - which I hope we won't." She turns to look at me and smiles, uncertainly.

You nod as you finally finish buckling the straps of the body holster. It's a rather tight fit, but the reassuring - if disturbingly comfortable - weight of the Golden Desert Eagle on your side seems to calm your nerves.

"Very well, then. I'll leave you to it." Kyuubey says, just as it creates yet another portal - this time leaving behind two grief seeds, making your disposable total into three. "This should be enough for tonight, if my calculations are correct."

You nod as you pick them up, stashing them in your inventory. Along with that hip flask of whisky you snuck in, even with Mami's express prohibition of alcohol during this assignment.

Just as Kyuubey turns to leave, though, it's then that you remember something, and you call out to it. Asking him about a certain name that's been popping up at you for a while now.

"Akemi Homura...? The name doesn't ring a bell, but I can run a search, if you like."

You say yes, and the mutant cat nods, before jumping up onto the windowsill and diving off. A typical exit.

"We should get going soon, Chiaki-san," Iori says after a moment, glancing at her expensive wristwatch as she comes close. She smells nice, of expensive perfume and soap. She offers you a smile. "Let's wait for Kyoko-san, and then we can leave."

It's then that she's elbowed to the side by Misaka, the arms dealer frowning. "Annoying white cat...anyway, Murderface!" She looks up at you, one hand grabbing a fistful of your skirt and tugging. "You are all set! HE grenades, flashbangs, five each under skirt! MK22 Silenced Tranquilizer Pistol with one extra magazine at back holster! New combat knife strapped to left boot, ankle!"

It's then that she smiles as she takes something from her lab coat pocket - she wears one now when she's out - and holds out what looks to be a golden necklace with a rather large cross pendant. "Misaka's good luck charm! Giving to you, hehehe!"

You take it, blinking through your glasses. It's...you're not a religious person, but you certainly recognize it as the Christian cross. You slip your head through the necklace and let the pendant hang down, resting against your chest. You examine the cross, and find a strange gold button inset at the very center, camouflaged to look like the rest of the bauble.

"Is secret!" Misaka seems overjoyed that you noticed. "When in trouble, pray very hard, and then press it! A big, big friend will come to rescue with a big bang!"

Okay. You're not sure what that means, but any help from Misaka is sure to be good help. You thank her and give her a few pats on the head. She giggles at this. "Say Misaka is a good--"

"You're a good girl." You say before she finishes. "Misaka is a good girl."

She's positively blushing at this praise. It's then that Kyoko bursts out of your room, already in the butler uniform. She...actually looks alright in it. Comfortable, even. Her long red hair tied into a rakish ponytail, amplifying the effect. She looks like the sort of butler you'd see in Otome games.

You glance at Mami and Iori, and they're all but gawping at Kyoko.

"W-what? Did I put it on wrong or something? What's up?" She says, momentarily discomfited by the staring.

Kyubey doesn't lie outright. He ommits what's inconvenient. If it says it doesnt recognize the name, it doesnt recognize the name.

Exactly. We are going to a gala held by 765 Production, the media company Iori works for. Midori's... friends work in the entertainment business, and are a clique that uncool people like her can't get into.

Sounds like a Girl Band or other entertainment like thing to me. Just saying, chances are extremely high that we will run into another magical girl, and if so, I'm willing to put money on it being from the rival Incubator.

"Huh? Hands in pockets? And then turn...what, this way or that...?" Kyoko seems to immediately obey your instructions despite being completely puzzled - and it's then that she blinks her one good eye as you snap your cellphone into your hand with a flick of your wrist. Two button presses later, and the image of a roguish young man with fiery crimson hair in a snappy black butler's uniform is frozen in time in your phone.

Now you're done, you say to Iori as you slip your cellphone quickly into your inventory while Kyoko fumes at you, speechless. Mami is smiling at this, while patting down some wrinkles on your companion's clothes.

"You can't wear headsets for tonight, so if you need to contact each other, discreetly call or message each other on your cellphones," Mami says just as all three of you make to finally step out of the apartment. "Again, remember that your main objective here is to get Iori-san back home safe and sound. If anything happens, even if you're being attacked, escape is your first option."

You nod at this, quietly, while Kyoko petulantly murmurs something about spoiling your fun. Mami only smiles at this, before leaning in and giving you both a kiss on the cheek each - warm, soft, and all too brief. You feel your own cheeks burn as Kyoko's murmurs turn incoherent, reddening as well.

Misaka also gives you one. "Is for luck! O-oh, and bring me souvenir! Do not forget, Murderface!"

You smile and nod. Of course you won't.

A moment more, and you're all outside. Misaka and Mami to see you off as you pile into the black company car that Kyuubey has loaned you - a nondescript black car with tinted windows and an unremarkable brand. But secretly it's been reinforced - bulletproof windows, redundant inflating system, the works. Probably all that's missing is a function to transform into a killbot.

You blink as Kyoko squeezes behind the driver's wheel. You ask her if she can drive at all, even with her blind spot.

"Yeah, yeah. I know how to drive, Murderface. Unlike someone here who drives while she's drunk. Said someone currently being in the damn maid costume, here." She adjusts the rear view mirror to focus on both you and Iori in the back seat.

But that was an EMERGENCY, you protest. You ran out of ALCOHOL.

Kyoko's rebuttal is lost as she starts and guns the engine, easing the car out into the street and onto the main road. Heading towards the bright lights of the upper district, where danger and debauchery lay.

This was going to be an interesting night.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl. Well, specifically speaking, not right now, not at this point of time.

Now, you're a maid, under the employ of one world-renowned idol Minase Iori, one of the many successful singers in 765 Production Studios. You will shut up unless you're spoken to, you will open doors and fetch things so that your employer won't have to, and as a special service, you will hurt anyone who so much as tries to harm a hair on her head.

You will hurt them. Hard. In the face. Until the floor underneath them is as red as the carpet laid out for your employer's arrival.

Fantasies of justified violence aside, you're still a bit irritated that you have to guard Minase Iori in this getup. You hate to say it, but you feel ten kinds of naked in the maid costume - and the four layers of stiff clothing and lacy, frilly garters aren't helping any.

It's the Shield, you realize with an irritated grunt. It's the entire costume. You've never really gone this long while awake without it on. Sure, the pantyhose hitched up a bit too much and the heels were brutal to run in and the skirt was short enough that a breeze would scandalize you - but it was you. It was part of who you are. It was part of your identity that was there, something you could touch, tactile. Something that you can never forget, even if you forgot your own name and your own face in a regular basis.

Chiaki Matsuda. Your name is Chiaki Matsuda.

You glance out the window of the car. True to her word, Kyoko's driving carefully - in fact, she's driving very well for someone with reduced depth perception. The streetlights whip by, ethereal halos of light perched on steel posts, casting a cold amber glow on the darkness. Beside you, Iori is silent, looking out her window as well - a somewhat wistful expression to her face. Her phone clasped in one hand, the other placed on the space of the backseat between you, fingers spread out at your direction.

The mansion where the gala-cum-record launch that your principal is supposed to attend is looming slowly up in the horizon. You figure you'll get there in thirty minutes or so, if Kyoko keeps her pace. You should probably use that time to ask some questions about the actual event and what you might expect.

What question do you ask Iori?

>> ☐ Anonymous 07/13/12(Fri)09:02 No.19859237

Great, a MG Noir quest when I'm up and about, for once!

As for the questions, one that immediately comes to mind is 'Which persons of note will attend?'
For one, that should tell us how many armed groups (of bodyguards) are likely to be around, how 'high profile' this event exactly is, and depending on who shows up, there could very well be girls from competing agencies playing babysitter around.

Also, if she's been to that mansion before and if she can give us a rundown on the structure distribution.

Might be a good idea for planning an escape route ahead of time if we have to get her out in a flash.

I need you to tell me about anyone who seems... different then you remember them. Especially if you and them are... close. I know they are your friends, but I NEED to assume that things aren't going to be as simple as we both want them to be..." pause "Don't give me that look. This is why you hired me, after all..."

Also, if anyone is interested, here's a list of all the music thus recommend for the Quest so far! It... has no Idolmaster stuff on it, which seems odd; anyone with more knowledge of the series then me (which is totally nothing) should suggest some tunes that, you know, Iori has sung? http://www.youtube.com/playlist?list=PL67063575C6FD2AB5&feature=plcp

"Hm? The...other guests, Chiaki-san?" Iori blinks, seemingly snapping out of her reverie as you ask her. "Well, um...let's see. I'm pretty sure most of the other girls in 765 Production will also be attending. Some of them make it a point never to attend, but they're usually the ones too busy to do so." Iori raises her cellphone and scrolls through her contacts.

"As for non-765 Production staff, erm...there is this one guy who always comes around these events." It's then that you note Iori's distaste becoming obvious on her face, the smile from earlier now twisted into a delicate frown. "I've been telling Producer-san to not let him know, but he's a huge investor in the studio, so we can't exactly just snub him."

She taps something on the touchscreen of her cellphone to show you a dark-skinned, large, heavyset man with rubbery lips and dead, black eyes. He seems to be sneering into the camera, bulging out of an obviously expensive suit. "Lance Kilgore, owner of Kilgore Enterprises. He's...he collects girls, Chiaki-san. Idols."

What, so he's a playboy? That's typical of anyone rich enough, you say. It's then that Iori shakes her head.

"N-no. It's...something else, Chiaki-san. He collects them and marries them. He has this 'family' - which is really more of a harem than anything else." Iori places thumb and forefinger on the screen and draws them together, making the phone zoom out - showing a large group of girls crowded around the man. "We let him attend just as a courtesy, and he never fails to hit on each of us, one by one, in turn. As if he's fishing for another to add to his collection. Producer-san thinks he's making a cult, or something - and from the way the girls talk about their 'husband', it's a bit disturbing."

And seeing as that's basically what we're going to, to meet and greet others from Iori's Idol industry... we'll see how this goes. shrug

You squint at the photo again, before nodding. Hitting on Iori or being a generally creepy motherfucker isn't something you should probably shoot someone over, but it's good to know, at least.

"I...I don't think there's anyone else that should be suspicious, Chiaki-san. Maybe one of the rival studios will try to gatecrash the party, but they usually end up getting thrown out before they could spoil our fun." Iori thinks. "Oh, um, and if you're going to ask, I don't really have an agenda. I just have to stick around till the very end. There's some media presence around, too, but only a few. Taking pictures and video."

It's then that she blinks, and she realizes just why you're asking. "Chiaki-san, I...I'm happy you're this concerned for my safety, but if it's alright, please try to relax, even if it's just for tonight. I'm positive nothing wrong will happen, and we'll be going back home to your apartment before you know it." It's then that you feel her hand on your own, the warmth of her hand piercing through even through the gloves the both of you are wearing.

Kyoko snorts from the driver's seat. "Sorry, Iori-chan, but that's how Murderface really is. Paranoid as fuck and twice as jumpy. Enough that I actually tried to get her to change ranks and be an Eversor instead."

You tell her to shut up. Eversors are nothing but a bunch of maniacs waving sharp sticks around.

Just drive, you one-eyed freak.

"The mansion layout?" Iori echoes, blinking at your question. "W-well, the main event takes place in the main ballroom, and I remember that there's just one way in and out of it." She furrows her brow. "Although, the last time, I snuck out with Yayoi through the kitchen...where they wheel in all the food from, you know? It's off to the side, usually covered by decorations or curtains and such, so whoever goes in or out isn't too visible. The entire mansion, though..." Iori shakes her head. "I'm afraid I don't really know much about the entire place. Sorry, Chiaki-san."

You shake your head. Any amount of information she can give you is important.

"As for the event itself, well..." The brown-haired idol thinks. "It's really nothing special. Everyone mills around the ballroom until the MC calls for their attention, accolades and awards are handed out, the album is launched. Then everyone mingles. Food and wine is served throughout. So it's really more of an excuse for everyone to get together than something really important..." Iori shrugs. "I wish I didn't have to come around. This'll be the first time I'm attending without...without Yayoi-chan."

You give her hand an awkward squeeze and say nothing else to her. You want to warn her if she sees anyone else acting strangely, but since you'll be by her most of the time, you can probably just ensure that they don't come too close, whoever they are.

It's then that you turn your attention to Kyoko, who now seems to be navigating the car through a sea of other cars headed towards the mansion as well, streaming through the open gates. The mansion itself is looming tall and huge in front of you, grand and elaborate with its bleached bone-white paint job with gilded windows and hand-sculpted tiles.

Rich people.

You reach out and tap at her shoulder, which earns you a grunt. "Yeah? Whaddaya want, Murderface? Kinda busy now, these assholes don't know shit about driving. ...God, I'm going to key that Ferrari so hard later. Bastard cut me off!"

You ask her what your escape plan will be if things do indeed warrant a quick getaway.

"That's easy. Just call or text if you want either an extraction or backup." She says after a moment's worth of adjusting her collar. "For simplicity's sake, let's use codewords. Red for backup, Green for immediate extraction. Tell me where you are and I'll get the car there, whatever it takes." Kyoko turns to you to grin toothily.

"Also, uh..." Kyoko murmurs as she turns back to the road. "I think, if we're already deep in the shit, we probably should forget about Mami-san's directives. I mean, just stop them from pursuing and all, right? She didn't say anything about that."

You nod at this, smiling slightly. No, Mami did not say anything about that all. And escaping while preventing your enemies from pursuing is STILL escaping, right?

Kyoko smoothly stops the car at the foot of the stairs leading up to the mansion's entrance, a lavish red carpet already draped down the middle to receive the guests, velvet rope keeping the camera flash-happy paparazzi back. You take a deep breath, glance at Iori, before clicking your side door open, pushing it back and primly stepping out. A casual onlooker would see you trying to disembark from the car properly - while in actuality, you're trying to move so that the grenades and other hardware stashed under your skirt don't clink together too loudly or obviously.

After a few moments, you manage it, and you walk around the car to Iori's side, pulling the door open for her. As soon as Iori places one foot out and onto the carpet do the camera flashes start - and you blink in momentary disorientation, the effect much like looking at things under a strobe light.

You help Iori get to her feet as elegantly as possible, her hand upon your own as you gently pull her up to a standing position. She smiles at you and nods, while you relinquish your grip on her arm, step back, and bow.

You wait for her to walk ahead of you before you raise your head and push the passenger door close with a gloved hand. Iori is already on her way up the stairs, and you make to follow - throwing Kyoko one last pointed look which she returns before driving off. You turn back to the task at hand, and follow Iori up into the mansion, keeping two steps behind.

The Golden Desert Eagle feels comfortable against your side. Reassuring. Letting you breathe easy, despite what it actually was.

You ignore the flashbulbs. A long time ago, you'd have been embarrassed by them.

It's funny how amnesia made you feel old.

You immediately feel the security presence as the entrance to the mansion comes into view. These are not the gorillas you met at Iori's penthouse - these are professionals, operators operating operationally, with multi-pouched kevlar vests, headsets, night vision goggles, smokescreens and flashbangs clipped to their belts. They're even stationed at regular intervals, too, with vision overlap so that not one is isolated from the rest. You can even see some at the upper floor balconies. Sniping spots, probably, or just good vantage points.

You're impressed so far.

At the very entrance, a couple of the guards on duty seem to be verifying those trying to get in, and both you and Iori are stopped even before you could step across the threshold. It's then that Iori takes out an ID from her purse, whispering something to the guard before gesturing towards you after a moment. You stay quiet, head bowed slightly, keeping up the act of the perfect maid - and it's after a few moments that the both of you are let in. Iori at the lead, you a few steps behind.

The mansion is...it's a mansion. The people who owned it are obviously rich, obssessed about buying ostentatious, overtly-elaborate furniture and artpieces in order to distract themselves from how empty and worthless their lives were. Even the tile underneath your feet is custom-stained and carved to show luxurious, spanning patterns that spread out as you observe them.

Guests are already milling about here. No sign of Lance Kilgore, thankfully. And from what you can see, no Magical Girls here, either...but then again, you've been wrong about that, haven't you?

There are fringe chances that the 'family' harem man is a red herring (and amusing poke) designed to draw our attention away from other possible threats.

Eitherway, no point looking for a fight. Let Iori mingle as she pleases, if she looks troubled without actually being in danger (such as if she's being hit on) the ideal solution would be to passively draw her away. 'Sorry to interrupt Mistress Midori but that essential call you mentioned before is on the line, would you like to take it now?' Or something like that. Or just you know, OOOPS CLUMSY MAIDO attention away from your charge. Not subtle but it'll do the job.

Really the key here is to maintain the whole maid thing professionally until it becomes essential to drop it. Also worth noting to ourselves, any security that lets us in without checking us (being loaded with more explosives and weapons then a small rebellion) is a security with enough holes in that Iori is exposed. Her comments about the place having excellent security are probably not to be trusted.

Looking around carefully while still keeping in respectful distance of Iori, it's then that you spot it. A glimmer of burning, intense gold, a visual spark that fills your vision before disappearing. You didn't see what it was or who was carrying it, but you're...sure that it was a Golden Weapon.

"Chiaki-san?" Iori asks after a moment, her voice low and careful. "Are you alright? You look a bit...pale, there, for a while."

You shake your head. You tell her that everything's fine, and you prove it by bowing once more. Iori seems to take a moment, before nodding and resuming her slow, deliberate walk. "We're headed towards the main ballroom, Chiaki-san, so please pay attention. Most of my friends - and that horrible man, probably - will be there. I'll have to speak in a different tone, but please don't take it personally."

You promise her you won't. It's not like being called a couple of names hurt.

Still, though...where'd that weapon come from? And who has it?

You decide to dwell upon those questions later as both you and Iori finally enter the main ballroom. And true to the idols promise, you see that there are a LOT of people here. A cursory scan reveals more than a handful of idols - and you can see how they're the center of attention in the small islands of investors and non-production staff around them. Some of the idols are telling jokes, others dispensing advice, and others are simply goofing around with their circle of friends.

You make to gruffly retort when you spot something miraculous nearby.

An open bar, at the side of the hall itself, beside the punch and the finger food.

Free flowing drinks, it seems. You can even see a few maids already sitting on the stools, slumped over the bar, nursing a drink.

Oh boy.

What do you do? There doesn't seem to be a threat at the moment, and Iori looks like she'll be fine if you leave her alone for a bit. In fact, two of her friends seem to be making her way towards her - one with long blue hair, and the other with long silver hair.

I would agree with these guys, here. We are acting like a professional, yes, but the WRONG PROFESSION. We're not suppose to look like a bodyguard right now; we are suppose to look like a forever put upon maid who's rolling her eyes as she goes for her nightly fix.

The more we look out of place, the less our disguise works (as well as a maid carrying a gun larger then her face can blend in, anyway).

You stand your ground, drawing your eyes away from the vile temptations of the free-flowing open bar - and you step back slowly, carefully, focusing your gaze on the floor as you hear the two idols walk up to Iori. The blue-haired one has a sort of melancholic air underneath her smiling facade, her purple eyes somewhat similar to yours but definitely sombre, even as they crinkle up at the corners as she smiles. The other girl, the one with the long silver hair and crimson eyes, has a strange air about her. She seems nice enough despite how her thick, luxurious curls make her look imperious - in fact, you could almost see her as somewhat similar to Mami, in terms of that big sister quality to her.

You would swear that the comparison isn't just because of her breasts, too.

They immediately greet Iori as they come to a stop in front of her, and your principal herself seems to be overjoyed to meet them, surprising the two by giving them a hug each. You learn that the first girl's name is Chihaya, the other Takane, and they've been rather worried about Iori when they heard what had happened.

You hear Iori downplay the traumatic event, saying that she had someone trustworthy to protect her. She leaves it at that, and you supress a smile as you keep your head bowed.

After a few minutes of the inane matters girls usually discuss whenever meeting, you hear the conversation taking a slightly different turn.

"And who is this, Iori-chan?" Chihaya asks, her voice having a curious tone to it. "I thought you disliked the idea of having a maid follow you around like a lovesick puppy? Why start now?"

"Silly." Takane cuts in. "She's not just her maid. She's her protector, obviously. One only needs to catch a glimmer of what she's carrying to protect Iori." Takane seems to 'hmmph' in satisfaction. "A golden firearm. Certain a bit...ostentatious, but perhaps as a mark of superiority, it does make sense." She clears her throat, before speaking again.

"Maid. Tell me, what is your name?"

You look up.

It seems you're being asked to introduce yourself.

How do you do so?

You glance questioningly at Iori, keeping your face carefully emotionless as you do so - and she gives you a surprised but firm nod, her own gaze slightly imperious. You bow slightly at her, before turning to Takane and Chikane. Bending slightly at the waist and at the knees, lowering your head even further as you spread your skirt in a careful, textbook curtsy. One foot in front of the other.

"Chiaki Matsuda," you reply in a soft, deadpan voice, hoping they'd mistake it for humility and shyness instead. You hold the curtsy for a few moments before straightening up.

"Chiaki...Matsuda-san, then, is it?" Takane smiles, before reaching out with a soft hand to cup your chin, making you look up at her instead of the bit of floor you've been focusing on.

"A beautiful name. I refuse to believe that you're only a maid, Matsuda-san." Her face moves just a bit closer to yours, and you manage to stop yourself from blinking as you feel her own breath on your lips. "If you are, then it is a regrettable waste."

Iori coughs at this, before suddenly pulling Takane away from you. "Oi, oi. Chiaki-chan's new at the job, Takane! Stop messing about with her, or you'll make her cry!"

Takane blinks at this, before giggling. "I was simply introducing myself in a better way, Iori-chan. What's so wrong about that?"

If Deculture sticks to anime tropes as I think he's doing, 'combat maids' is redundant.

You bow at the direction Iori and her friends disappeared off to, holding it until they're well and out of view - before you straighten up and make a careful and deliberate beeline towards the open bar. It's a sorry sight, really - only a few more of the stools at the bar are occupied, with the maids there either gossiping with each other or slumped onto the bar themselves, staring into their glasses in glazed-eye desolation. You slide onto an empty stool, careful to consider your heavy starched skirt and its contents, and it's with a carefully polite voice that you order a double whisky from the bartender.

"Too stiff. Too polite." Comes the voice beside you - and you blink through your glasses as you behold a maid, around your age and height, black hair tied a bit messily into a curly ponytail, nursing what looks to be a Shirley Temple. "But you're...familiar, somehow. You're almost like the Head Maid, in a way, down to the glasses. Shame about your hair, though. If it was longer and braided, then you'd be a spitting image."

You're not sure if that's a compliment or an insult, so you shrug as your ordered drink is placed in front of you.

"You're not a real maid, that much is clear." The girl says again, her bright green eyes peeking from her mop of black hair. "You're just someone pretending to be one." It's then that she giggles. "I won't say anything, though. Your secret's safe with me."

Good to know, you murmur, before sipping at your drink. No, you're not gulping it down. Take your time to taste it. Sip, not gulp.

"Nice gun. Did you plate that yourself or is it an online job sort of thing?" She asks again, and you murmur something along the lines of 'it was a gift'. The maid nods at this, before sipping her own drink through a straw. "One of the Master's friends has something like that, you know. Not a gun, but something else."

You don't say. You glance at her fully, now, and you realize that she's, in fact, foreign. Not Japanese. Italian, probably, or something similar. She's quite pretty, for a maid.

How do you respond?

Misaka already idolizes us, and we've certainly warmed up to Kyoko. Fabiola sits up straighter in her seat, but only, it seems, to stretch her arms over her head, like a cat would - and it's then that she slumps onto the bar yet again. "My Master? That's easy. Young blonde man in the corner, your eight o' clock. See him?"

You turn around slightly, looking out with the corner of your eye. You spot him. He's a nondescript looking young man, probably just started his first year of high school. Clean-cut, blonde, rather naive looking. He seems to be working up the courage to talk to Iori, who is busy chatting it up with Takane and Chihaya.

"He has a crush on yours, poor thing." Fabiola says as she sips on her Shirley Temple yet again. "He has all her albums, all her singles, and I do believe a girly magazine featuring your principal exclusively. He thinks I don't know about it, but underneath the bed is the first place anyone looks, really."

You turn back to your drink. It's already been half-drained. You look at it mournfully, before waving at the bartender to restore it to its former glory.

As the bartender does so, you ask her which friend of the Master's is she talking about.

"That thing. Your six." Fabiola isn't even looking, her gaze locked into the bottom of her murky mixed drink. It's then that you catch a full glimpse of Lance Kilgore - and his entourage of slim-bodied, glassy-eyed 'family'. All of them wearing clothes that would make a street walker blush.

You nod, not taking your eyes off the laughing, quivering, grinning mountain of meat.

"Same gold. Same luster. At least, that's what I think." The maid beside you says. "Rumor has it he's killed twenty men alone with those. I don't know how." She finishes her drink, pushing it to the side. "He then took the fiancees of those twenty men and added them to his 'family'. Look at their eyes - they've given up hope. They're no longer alive, just toys for him."

Well. It seems that you finally have a visual on the Golden Weapon. Or a lead, at least.

"Be careful. He has been trying to get one of the idols here added to his collection." Fabiola warns. "I would've gutted him like a fish years ago, but Master implored not to. He says we are just misunderstanding him, or rot like that." She sighs. "Master is too believing in the good in people."

She shrugs. "What I'm trying to say is that not many people will mourn the death of Lance Kilgore. If you are catching my drift."

Should Killgore become a problem however, well, we have to protect Lori.

Killing people openly in a party of young girl idols is generally considered rude though, especially since most of these people have probably never seen what a bullet can actually do to a corpus. We don't want to embarrass Lori by mucking up all her friends clothes with blood after all.

This. Also, call Kyoko and update her on the situation. Don't call for backup or an evac just yet, but let her know things are starting to look like they might get hairy. Pull Iori aside with an excuse that she has an urgent phone call and inform her as well. No need to keep her unaware as that could lead to her being put in danger. She was there for the golden weapons lecture so she should know how bad things might get.

No need to go looking for a fight, but be ready for one.

If it was hidden, then considering its size, we wouldn't be able to get to it in a timely manner. Not to mention, if it was under our skirt, the size of the gun would make it obvious we have weapons under there. We can't hide it on our back, because it's too big.
We have no jacket that could have hidden it and one would not be appropriate for our disguise.

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 07/14/12(Sat)10:09 No.19875084

You are a Magical Girl, and you are currently being coerced into justifiable homicide.

Not really coerced. More like persuaded. Actually there isn't really much persuading to be done. You'd do it yourself in a heartbeat, just by principle. You won't even charge for the effort, and you'd gladly volunteer for the cleanup of the mess and the eventual witnesses if need be.

Some people just really need to die, and Lance Kilgore is one of those people. And as the slightly-intoxicated young woman in the fetching maid uniform sitting beside you on the open bar had so helpfully suggested, no one will mourn him having an accident.

You blink slightly at yourself and wonder if it's the Golden Desert Eagle strapped to your side talking, or just your natural predelection to aggression.

But no one came blame you, really. Standing seven feet high and musclebound to the point that he seems more mountain than man, Lance Kilgore is a beast, almost transhuman. His clothes, infested with sequins, glitter, lined with what looks like fur from some unfortunate, recently-extinct animal, seems tailored specifically to show off his sculpted chest and abdominals, and also show the entire room just how much of a preening bastard he is. The parachute pants that seem to have come directly from some bygone century swishes against the floor, held secure with a jewelled belt buckle with his initials written out in diamonds.

His teeth are grotesquely grilled - diamonds drilled directly into the enamel securing a network of silver and titanium, gilding each edge, giving him a gleaming sneer that spells SWAG when he's clenching his jaw. His eyes, covered in star-shaped shades, the frames dazzling with sequins.

And finally, to top off the douche ensemble, the douche cherry to this douche sundae - a pimp hat, velvet in hue and in material, with a jaunty feather bobbing from the headband.

But even with all these, not one of them are what catches your attention the most.

It's the golden bangles, on his wrists. Thick, heavy ones, gleaming, an icon of a double-headed eagle with its wings sculpted into the metal, the likeness captured in mid-flight. On him, they look to be the circumference of car tires, encasing his thick wrists.

It would be reasonable to assume that it's simply part of his wardrobe, in Lance's effort to make himself look as tough and as flashy as he felt. Typical gold jewelry, ostentatious and garish, like the necklace with the massive diamond-encrusted pendant shaped like the silhouette of a woman spreading her legs hanging from his neck. But you know, as sure as you're ignoring the double whisky in front of you, that the Desert Eagle holstered by your side and those bangles came from only one origin. An origin with pink hair and sunless eyes.

"A piece of work, him." Fabiola murmurs after a moment. "They say he is quite the monster on the battlefield, and much more so in the bedchamber. But those tales, of course, are spread by his fans." The maid laughs slightly at this. "Still, I would say a few shots, point-blank between his eyes, should do the trick and easily enough. Do the world a favor, Pretend Maid, and I will make it worth your while."

She winks at you again, and you can't help but wonder if rich people actually spend their spare time going to these kind of events.

How do you respond?

While beating Kilgore into the ground would be amusing, we shouldn't go out of our way to cause trouble. Our focus is protecting Iori. Hide the golden gun, avoid Lance, and keep Iori away from him.

Given how much swag Blacker Baron has, he might just hypnotize his harem with his charisma rather than any type of magic. Regardless, keep away from him.

Keep the gun out, as it says "don't fuck with us."

Collect Iori. Say something along the lines of "Mistress, an urgent phone call," to get her out of the room. She knows about the weapons so she knows the potential danger of the situation.

Call QB, and inform him that it's not just magical girls that Pinky seems to be handing the weapons to. Then call Kyoko and give her an update. No need for an evac or backup, but give her an update so that she knows the chances of things going south went up exponentially.

All the while, we should take what this girl is saying with a grain of salt. She's basically telling us to do what we want to do...or what the gun wants us to do. Proceed with caution.

The maid blinks at this, before frowning slightly. "Of course I know you are not doing this for free. Do you think I would even consider offering this job to someone else when I myself want to be the one to pull the trigger that ends his life?" Fabiola glares at you, her emerald eyes narrowing, before she shakes her head - a sigh escaping her lips. "Like I have said, my hands - and that of the Head Maid's - are tied. Master does not wish for us to kill, nor do we wish him to see us kill."

She smiles up at you, wistfully. "Master, he is naive. Young and naive, and believes in the good in people. The Head Maid and I, we are far from that, but we are willing to stay our hands if it means him being able to sleep soundly at night. We prefer the sincere lie to the begrudging truth, if only for him."

It's then that Fabiola slides off of her stool, smoothing down her skirt with both gloved hands. "It is your decision, Pretend Maid. I cannot force you. But if you do change your mind, then I will be ready to recompense you. In any shape or form that you would wish me to."

She reaches up to carefully brush some strands of hair from her eyes, before taking a step back and bowing formally to the bartender and to you. When she straightens, the jovial look on her face is gone, replaced with a carefully blank expression. She turns around elegantly, before walking forward with measured steps, towards the young man she pointed out (who was now trying to catch Iori's attention (and being unsuccessful at it).

Idea: Maybe if we let Lance get a good look at our gun (nothing obvious, just walk by and stretch or something) he'll come to us and comment on the similarity of our weapons. It'd be interesting to see if Faust is trying to put together a conspiracy beyond her direct management.

Call QB and inform him that we have spotted a golden weapon and its wielder is (probably) not a magical girl.
Call Kyoko and update her on the situation so she can get ready to either extract us with the limo or back us up.
Find a way to tell Iori, either call her or just talk to her. Either way she needs to know to stay away from Kilgore.

But we might be jumping the gun a little.

Prepping is fine, especially because this isn't going to go smoothly, but we need to consider talking to him, too. This is a whole new angle on Pinky's plan, and figuring out that is more important then acquiring swag. If we can set this up to talk / fight at a later date, where we don't need to worry about watching Iori, that would be ideal. He may not be a total bad dude.

Call QB and inform him of the situation. Tell him the source of the info is questionable as it seems just a bit too convenient, but we are now on high alert.

Then, call Kyoko and inform her of the situation. No need for backup or evacuation, but seriously, we don't want to keep her in the dark.

Then, collect Iori. Again, keep the role so we don't raise any suspicion. Inform her of the potential threat. Perhaps we could ask her how we could get close to Lance so we can confirm whether or not the weapon is from Pinky, gather more info, and if necessary kill.

You select Kyuubey's number from the contact list and tap it twice - the smartphone showing a close-up of the mutant cat's face as it connects the call. You wait for the other end of the line to pick up before you place the device against your ear. It takes him three rings to do so, and when he does, he has a rather smug tone to his voice when he greets you.

"Ah, Matsuda. I suppose you're calling about a certain Lance Kilgore, of Kilgore Enterprises?"

...You haven't even said a word, and he already pre-empts you. How the hell did he know?

"I have my ways. But let's not chat about it too much, you'll blow your cover if other people see you talking on the phone for much too long. Now, what do you want to know about him?"

You immediately ask about anything Kyuubey can dig up on him. If this bastard's been in business for a long time, then anything Kyuubey could find may give you a hint on how to take him out quietly.

"There's not much known about Kilgore. American background, Detroit. Criminal record's not much of a help here, just the usual B&E, Robbery, Homicide. It says here he came to Japan trying to box professionally in the amateur divisions, but he suffered defeat early on." You hear the faint tap of a keyboard. "He disappeared for awhile, before coming back two weeks later and literally punching someone's head off in a sparring match. He was seen wearing strange bangles on his arm when he reappeared. A month later, the gym owner's daughter married him and placing all her assets in his name. A week after that, a popular voice actress did the same exact thing. And the next. Ad nauseam. He amassed such a fortune that he started his own company, which deals primarily in escort services."

Outside of him being the typical 4chan quest main character, this sounds exactly like the kind of situation where Pinky might be involved. Not all the powers and side effects might be madness and bloodrage like Kirara's did. It could just amplify emotions and abilities that one already naturally has.

Magical girls might be a good target for Faust as they have powers to work with, but normals are going to have their own abilities to work with. Ambition, greed, lust, physical power... any of this might be worth corruption.

A moment of silence. And then-- "Matsuda, you're not planning on killing him, are you?" Kyuubey replies, seemingly shocked. "You do realize you're planning on killing the CEO of a very important company and a well-known celebrity as that?"

You tell him immediately about the bangles just before taking the smallest sip from your double. It takes all your willpower to place it back down on the shiny varnished bar top, and even more to let go of it.

"...I see. Very well, then. I'll leave it up to your discretion on how you deal with this situation. I would ask that you try and keep the casualties confined to just him, but I think I needn't bother. Just...try and think about our PR, Matsuda."

The line goes dead, and you end the call. You take another sip before making another one, this time to the one-eyed butler you left stewing in the company car.

"FINALLY. RED? GREEN?" Kyoko's voice comes much too loud and much too clear from the smartphone's speaker, enough that you automatically flinch away from it. "I'M READY. I'M READY ANYTIME, MURDERFACE. SAY THE WORD AND I'M THERE. 1.81 JIGGAWATTS, MURDY, LET'S GO BACK TO THE FUCKING FUTURE."

You snap at her to quiet down, and then let her down easily by telling her about the situation. You're not asking for backup or extraction just yet, but simply giving her a heads up that you may need it sooner than later.

"Oh. Seriously? Tch." The disappointment is clear in Kyoko's voice. "You could've just texted, Murderface, y'know. Got me all excited for nothing! That's what you're good at, just killing buzzes everywhere. Buzzkillface!"

You tell her to shut up and just get the limo (and herself) ready. Just in case.

"Fine, fine. You got it. I'll warm the car up for you just in case I need to bail your ass."

If there is trouble, we need a way to minimize casualties. Look for a fire alarm or something that will make anyone who isn't brainwashed or a big scary black guy leave. However, if we do this, we will definitely need Kyoko to escort Iori back to the car while we deal with Lance. No need for the principal to get lost in the chaos and find herself in harm's way.

You end the call right after that, and shove the smartphone back into your inventory as you mull over what had just been said. Kyuubey didn't really tell you much, other than confirm that the bangles do have something to do with how he's been getting a lot of attention lately - elevating their status from gaudy jewelry to actual threat.

You turn slightly to look at Fabiola, who seems to be quietly standing behind her Master. She notices you looking, and gives you a small nod - and a wink. Well, maybe she blinked, but you got the spirit of it.

Maybe you'll be taking up her offer after all. Now you just have to clear up just how she's going to pay for it. After all, you're not running a charity here.

You make to leave the bar, before blinking as you notice the tall, gaudy Lance - standing heads and shoulders above his horde of glassy-eyed concubines - start to make his way towards Iori. Iori seems to have caught wind of what was about to happen, and seems to be trying not to pay attention - instead talking a bit more loudly to both Takane and Chihaya, who also seems to be dreading the inevitable contact.

This allows us to get her out of harm's way and let her know we need to get her out asap.

I'm with Negative though, we do need more information about what Pinky is doing. We need a way to put Lance in a situation we can control that allows us to get said information and then kill him if deemed necessary.

Going clumsy may embarrass Iori, and give Lance leverage, and the effect he has on women may be magical, so we can't not interfere.

Make our way over to Iori and ask if Mistress needs anything. Give her some subtle signal that she has a large black man heading her way.

Don't cause a scene just yet. If Iori gets the hint, we might be able to make a quiet withdrawal from the party.

Running interference shouldn't be hard at all. You already have an idea on how you should do it. The proper way. The professional way. Even though you'd just as take a running start, jump, and smash both your heels into his face.

You slide off of your stool, before blinking as you realize you're actually leaving a half-empty glass of whisky alone.

It's a crazy world we live in, you muse.

You make your way towards Chiaki, in that same deliberate, composed manner you'd seen Fabiola walk to her Master with. You try not to make it obvious that you're keeping tabs on Lance himself - it seems, for the moment, that he's simply chatting Iori up, his hands around two of his blank-eyed groupies. You hear Iori's nervous giggle joining Lance's loud braying - he must've cracked a joke he thought was hilarious - and you force yourself to focus your gaze on Iori instead, quickening your step just a bit more.

"It begins. Do not say I did not warn you." You hear Fabiola whisper as you pass by her. This you ignore - you don't need to be told twice about what was happening. The important here is to deny this image-obsessed pimp the chance to get his hands all over your idol.

...Well, no. Not YOUR idol.

Your Principal. Client. Stakeholder.

Get it together, dammit.

A few more steps and you finally make it to Iori's side, who seems thankful enough to fly into your arms and give you a hug - but fortunately, she also has the wits not to, and instead look surprised that you're there. You bow to her, feeling not only Iori's and her friends' eyes upon you, but also Lance's - and it's then that you speak.

"My apologies, Mistress, but you have an urgent call to receive." You murmur, deadpan, keeping your head low.

You straighten after a few moments, and it's here that you play your gamble as you bring your arms behind you, clasping both your hands together. If Lance was truly the image-obsessed brute that he was, he would note the now highly-visible Golden Desert Eagle holstered to your side as something he'd like to add to his collection of mundane golden things. If he was the warp-touched beast that you fervently hoped he is, then he would recognize the veiled challenge for what it is, and react accordingly.

"A-ah. I see." Iori nods after a moment, before glancing towards her friends. "I'm sorry, Chihaya-chan, Takane-chan--" And then she glances up at the behemoth in front of her. "A-and Sir Lance, but I do have to take this call. Please excuse me."

You both make to leave the ballroom floor, when it's then that you feel a large hand clamping around your arm. Applying a near-crushing pressure, which you would have reacted to in pain if you hadn't been already used to feeling hurt immeasurably worse.

You blink at the meaty fist curled around your right arm - and the golden bangle clamped around its wrist - and it's then that you stare up at the smiling, unexploded face of Lance Kilgore. His teeth impeccably white as he grins.

"That's a nice gun you have there, little maid. Why don't you leave it with me for...safe keeping, instead? It looks way too big for someone as small as you."

And there. You feel it. A choking, killing intent, the pressure exuding the giant man in crushing waves. The way his eyes seem to glimmer - and darken - at the sight of the Desert Eagle, even if barely an inch of it is exposed from its holster.

How do you respond? Iori is waiting for you.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You're not particularly concerned that the someone in question is a dark-skinned, seven-foot tall transhuman giant, a grotesquely musclebound depiction of the human form.

You're not particularly concerned that, realistically, he could take you in both hands and rip you apart limb from limb without so much as a grunt of effort.

You're also not particularly worried that he currently has you by your favorite drinking arm, in a grip tight enough that you're already losing sensation in that limb.

All you know is that your left arm is still free to draw the Golden Desert Eagle from the holster it's strapped in. It would only take you a moment to do so, and half of another to put a bullet through his grinning face.

But you don't. Not yet. Not immediately.

Because that is not what proper, elegant maids do.

You are Chiaki Matsuda, a Vindicare, a ranged murderer under the employ of the Ninth Incubator of the Officio Assassinorum. You are considered, if a captured Magical Girl is to be believed, as one of the more infamous of your rank. You are slightly amnesiac, and you spend your time filling your stomach with alcohol and painkillers in between missions.

Currently you are in the middle of an assignment to escort an idol during an album launch-cum-gala in one of the swankiest mansions you've ever been in. The rich and famous are in full force here, trying to distract themselves from how empty and pointless their lives are by partaking in empty and pointless displays of extravagance. One of them in particular, a dark-skinned giant by the name of Lance Kilgore, has his sights on the weapon that a pink-haired, black-eyed demoness had blessed you with.

Your principal is waiting for you.

How do you get yourself out of this predicament?

It's in the span of approximately one eyeblink that you visualize yourself killing Lance Kilgore. You know with absolute certainty that you'd be able to draw the pistol from your holster without even looking. You're even sure that the gun would jump into your hand as if in anticipation, the metal warm and eager and ready to kill.

From there it would simply be a matter of raising it, pressing the mouth of the barrel against Kilgore's massive forehead, just between his bushy eyebrows, and then pulling back on the trigger until you felt the gun kick back in your hand.

You're sure that nothing will be left of his face, reducing his skull into one massive exit wound.

You're sure that your glasses will be splattered with not only his blood, but also bits of his skull and most probably a smattering of brain matter.

And you're sure - for some reason, you're much too certain of it, to the point that you could almost taste it - you would be laughing while his body topples to the floor.

You blink once or twice as the vision fades from view. Making sure that you did not unconsciously enact the events just as you indulged yourself in letting them play out mentally.

You look up at Kilgore's unexploded face, at his unmarred skull. You smile thinly up the invisible exit wound that cores right through skin, muscle, bone and brain.

You murmur something in a low and quietly vulnerable voice. Playing the role of the humble, indentured servant, tactfully begging off from the harsh attentions of a cruel master. You let him hear the fear in your voice, the feeble veiled protest.

It's then that he lets go. Loosening his grip, slowly.

And it's then that he smiles.

"You...you're something special, aren't you?" The gilded, diamond-encrusted grin on his face takes on a rather lewd curl as he moves forward, reaching with his other bangled hand to take your chin between two fingers, forcing you to look up just a bit more.

"You've been touched by her, too." Kilgore says smoothly, his voice between a leopard's hunting growl and a purring engine. "I can smell her on you - taste her on you, in fact. But you have so much to learn, still so pure. I can teach you everything you want to know, little girl. I can...train you."

He licks his grilled teeth, coating the diamonds there with a spit shine.

You look up at him, your gaze unblinking from behind your glasses - and it's then that you hear Iori's heels clacking on the marble tiled floor, heading your way.

"Chiaki! What are you doing?! I need to take that call, now! Stop dawdling around like an idiot, you stupid girl!" Iori snaps harshly, the imperious tone sharp in her voice as she grabs your other arm and tugs you back to her - and Kilgore's grip is loose enough that your right arm slips right through his fingers. "I'm sorry if she bothered you, Mister Kilgore. Chiaki can be slow, sometimes."

You let Iori drag you off the ballroom floor and into one of the balconies facing out of the mansion - surprising one of the operators busy having a smoke right then. He excuses himself, but not after a token attempt of looking down Iori's low-cut dress.

"There. We're alone now." Iori manages after making sure no one is around. "W-what is it, Chiaki-san? What's the emergency? Is...is the group here again? What is it?"

How do you explain things to Iori?

"What?" Iori's eyes go wide as soon as you finish telling her what you've discovered about the man she was talking to only moments ago.

"Lance Kilgore has one of those...weapons? The ones Kyuubey-san warned you about?" Her gaze immediately strays to the Desert Eagle holstered at your side. "But what are you going to do, then...?"

You tell her.

Iori's voice, earlier tinged with aristocratic haughtiness, is now tinged with panic and just the slightest bit of fear. 'B-but...but Chiaki-san, he hasn't done anything bad yet, has he? I mean...yes, he's as subtle as a jackhammer, and twice as annoyingly loud, but..." It's then that she clasps your hand between hers. "...A-all my friends are here, Chiaki-san. People I care about. If you fight him here, they might get hurt." She shakes her head. "Please, Chiaki-san. I already lost Yayoi. I don't want to lose anyone I have left, too."

Seems like a reasonable option. Shooting up the place because Kilgore might be a threat, while cautious in the aspect of taking him out before he can, is a bit incautious due to the obvious reason of the dozens, if not close to a hundred or two people, security and staff.

Firefight in a crowded area, with a CQC expert? No thank you. Especially when the Tactical Operators Security, Inc. decide to come and play.

That being said, it would be perfectly IC for the emotionally stunted Murderface to try and push Iori away and towards Garcia, I think.

As QB implied earlier, there would be an uproar if Kilgore was blammed here. While we may need to intervene in case Kilgore tries something, killing him here would may cause a PR nightmare if we were attributed to his death. Given Murderface's near-celebrity status amongst the other MG organizations, we'd also be easily recognizeable by witness description and/or surveillance footage. We may want to avoid a confrontation here if at all possible.

This is a first.

As far as you can remember - from what you CAN remember, anyway, your memory being the bullet-ridden sieve that it is - you haven't really been in the business of being such a pushover when your principals are concerned. You had always been bullish and stubborn whenever they tried to order you around, and you half-remember an incident where you shot a particularly demanding Principal in the foot just to get him to hunker down behind cover during a firefight.

Now you're letting an idol - a waspish young woman whose only skill is making herself look pretty enough for the cameras and sing brainless pop songs - order you around, following her orders like a lovesick, craven puppy. Not just once, mind, but twice now.

You're thankful Kyoko isn't here to laugh and rub it in your face.

In any case, Iori seems heartened by your grudging acquiescence. "Thank you, Iori-san. I'll...I'm alright with leaving the event early in return. We can leave right after the album launching itself, and I'll tell both Chihaya-san and Takane-san to leave along with us. Alright?"

You nod after a moment. This is an acceptable compromise. You glance out of the balcony for a moment, before turning towards back to the ballroom hall - spotting a certain blonde-haired boy trying to sneak glances at the both of you, with his maid patiently waiting beside him.

[]Have Iori meet him and give him what he wants. An autograph, of course.

Stepping forward and to the side slightly - blocking the young man's view of Iori, placing yourself directly in his path of vision - you turn around to face Iori, both hands clasped behind you. The classic maid pose, and conveniently placing your tranquilizer pistol within a moment's reach.

"Chiaki-san?" Iori blinks. "What are you--" It's then that you cut her off as you tell her to listen, which she does, admirably enough. You tell her to look past your shoulder, discreetly and slowly, and find a young man with blonde hair trying desperately to act normal while sneaking glances at your direction.

"A blonde young man...? O-oh, you mean Lovelace-san?" Iori blinks once more as you confirm her guess with a nod. "What about him? I've heard that he's quite well off, and I haven't heard anything bad about him..." It's then that she smiles a strange, if stiff smile. "A-ah. Would Chiaki-san want me to introduce the both of you? I'm sure he would--"

You cut her off again as you shake your head, frowning at the completely off-base assumption by the idol. You tell her that he's been itching to talk to Iori, at the very least get an autograph. You tell her to at least make his waiting worth it - he's a fan, and fans should always be treated right. Or so you think that's how it works.

Iori stares at you for a few moments, before sighing as if in complete relief. "O-oh! An autograph...! T-that's easy, Chiaki-san! I can do that easily - and since you're the one who asked me, I'll make it special for him!"

You nod at this, before stepping to the side again to let her step past you. Turning around just as she does, and giving her a tiny, encouraging pat on the bottom - making her squeak as you do so.

...You didn't think idol bottoms could be so soft.

You follow Iori back into the ballroom, her giving you a rather strange, slightly-embarrassed look every few steps, a slight pink tinge in her cheeks - and you nod at her just as she stops in front of Garcia Lovelace, the young man just as surprised as his maid, looking at you with wide eyes.

"Lovelace-san?" Iori turns her dazzling smile up to 11 as she holds out her hand to shake the young man's. "I apologize, I was a bit busy catching up with my friends. I mean to talk to you much earlier. Iori Minase of 765 Productions. I'm sure you've heard of me?"

"I...I-I...um..." Garcia is working his jaw up and down, trying to get coherent sounds out of his mouth, but not being able to. His hand limply shaking Iori's own.

You smile slightly at this, before looking pointedly at Fabiola and canting your head slightly to the side. She nods after a moment, and the both of you leave your wards alone as you step away just a bit for them to talk.

"My eternal gratitude is yours, Pretend Maid," Fabiola murmurs underneath her breath as she stands beside you, the both of you looking like two maids simply waiting for their Masters to finish their conversation. "He was all too ready to run home crying earlier. Master has yet to...have them drop in terms of talking to the species known as woman."

You shrug at this, before telling her that you will be accepting her offer. But on your terms. Lance Kilgore - who is at the other side of the ballroom floor, talking to a blonde-haired idol - will die, just at a time and place of your choosing.

"A wise decision, Pretend Maid. And I agree - this place is far too good to be stained with his blood. If you need my assistance, you have it."

The first question you ask takes Fabiola completely by surprise - it seems that she was expecting something else completely different. "What underwear...?" She blinks a few times, before finally smiling, a faint pink blush coloring her cheeks as she fidgets slightly. "How forward, Pretend Maid. I cannot give you your compensation in advance, as much as I am tempted to--"

You cut her off right there by asking her again. A bit more firmly this time.

"...Cotton. I'm wearing cotton. White." Fabiola blinks in surprise, raising an eyebrow. "It's...it's only common sense. You don't wear anything lacy and elaborate under this many layers of cloth. You need something that breathes easily and comfortable. Why are you..."

Her words drift off into silence as a knowing smile curls her lips, her eyes hooded. You blink at her turn of expression and avert your gaze, mumbling a curse under your breath.

"Ah. I see. I SEE, Pretend Maid." Fabiola giggles delicately. "Here starts your first lesson in Maidship - you do not wear underwear while in the guise of service. If you do, then you must be prepared to take your oath of servitude to an entirely new level." Her smile widens. "Did your Master dress you? If so, then that only confirms my suspicions."

You tell her to shut up and ask about Kilgore's weaknesses. You don't need to hear it from a maid who is more than willing to pay for a contract with her body.

"What weaknesses are there that need to be asked?" The maid shrugs, before nodding at Lance's direction. "He is a brawler, through and through. He uses dirty tactics to gain an upper hand. He is slow, but powerful - I have seen him punch right through concrete and steel. There is also evidence of him being able to move quickly in short, sharp bursts. Imagine a cobra inside a turtle's shell - ponderous and cumbersome, but able to strike quickly without warning. If you are to kill him, I suggest being faster, or shooting him with your equivalent of a battleship broadside. Do not leave anything behind to bury."

That's a tall order, you note.

"It is the only way to make sure. There are some who say that he has the devil's luck." Her voice falls in volume. "They say that he once had his heart torn out, only to keep fighting for days on end."

Sounds like Kilgore is a tough bastard, indeed. But it's not like you hadn't done it yourself.

"Your confidence is as admirable as your dedication to your guise, Pretend Maid. I anticipate your results as much as I anticipate reimbursing you." Fabiola says this, a small innocent smile curling her lips, and you wonder silently if all maids turn out like her in the long run. If so, then you've just understood what the fetish was all about.

"Come, stop gawping at me. Our Masters seem to have finished flirting awkwardly with each other."

You glance back at Iori and Garcia - and you see that Iori had just finished signing an entire page of Lovelace's daily planner, seemingly taking her time to make the autograph as detailed and as personalized as possible. Garcia looks to be over cloud nine with this, and reddens like a tomato as Iori's fingers touch his briefly as she gives the planner back to him.

"I will leave you to it, Pretend Maid. My Master has things to attend to early in the morning." Fabiola gives you one last look as Garcia walks towards her, all smiles, holding the planner like some sort of holy relic. You hear him immediately gab to the maid about what just happened, and how he's never going to wash his hands again. Fabiola does a good job of sounding interested.

"Well, that's done with, Chiaki-san. Just like you asked." Iori says as she stops in front of you, beaming. "I'm a good girl, aren't I?"

You absently nod yes as you turn to look for Kilgore, missing Iori's briefly hurt look as you scan the partygoers.

...Huh. Strange. He seems to have disappeared, yet his crowd of girls are still there.

Nah, we need to save the really big guns for super-threats.

Kilgore is extremely dangerous, no doubt. But we can't go wasting our best on somebody who'll probably be mid-tier in Golden Weapon users.

All we need is to give him a Willy Pete shower to distract him, have Misaka deliver a 20mm package, and then get something long and pointy to knock the Golden Bracers off his burning corpse before he regens.

"Chiaki-san, that's mean. I just signed that guy's planner just because you said so, and..."

No. Wait. Something's wrong. Something is--

You look around, eyes wide. You see Fabiola and Garcia heading towards the main exit - but are stopped by what looks like two of the operators you've seen guarding the entrances. You see that all the other ways out of the ballroom have been sealed by gun-wielding guards as well.

It's then that you hear the sound of three dozen knives being pulled from their sheathes. Slivers of light appearing in the hands of Kilgore's concubines.

Their eyes as black as the sunless night, black blood dripping down their cheeks.

"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN!" Yells a voice from somewhere high up in the ceiling. The speakers, you realize. "WELCOME TO LANCE KILGORE'S FIRST EVER BLOODBATH CHALLENGE!"

Confusion clouds every one of the guests' faces, some of them wincing at the artificially-amplified voice. Even Fabiola, in mid-tirade at one of the operators, flinches at the sound.

"YOU HAVE BEEN DECADENT FOR TOO LONG, ELITES OF MITAKIHARA." The voice, evidently Kilgore's, blares through the ceiling speakers. "THE TIME IS NOW FOR YOU TO BE CLEANSED BY HER PURIFYING GRACE! BY HER PURIFYING FIRE!" A crazed, hollow laughter. "MY CONCUBINES WILL PREPARE YOU, THE FLESH OF FALLEN ANGELS!"

Shit. SHIT.

Fabiola looks at you, her eyes wide, just as Iori grabs your arm, pressing herself against you in complete and utter fear.

What do you do?

So two thoughts as to why Kilgore is murdering everyone:

1. He had this planned from the start, Murderface is just coincidentally here to help repel his murder death kill harem or:

2. Pinky got to him before we did and told him we'd do him in, just like crazy sword bitch

OR EVEN:

3. The Golden Weapons' crazifying effect is amplified when they are near each other, and Kilgore just went stir crazy from madness overload.

Just some theories as to why Kilgore has sudden urge to paint the mansion red.

Life is a very strange experience sometimes.

Take today for example. A bodyguard cum escort job comes up at the last minute. Very high pay, and all I have to do is pretend to be a vert expensive mantoy for a flouncy idol. Not quite the adrenaline pumper, but after the last one, anything easy was welcome.

A message pops up. It's my wife. She kinda decided to go shopping with a friend. Eh, why not. All the better to prepare in peace. Besides, the more people she knows, the less I have to worry about her. She's very, very flaky inside.

It also turns out my usual weapons dealer has closed shop for the day. Not to mention that it's eerily quiet. It's a bit weird, but she's... eccentric. A noisy one, but still. Hopefully she's sleeping.

I check the dossier on my job. It's a lot less sparse than usual. And in hardcopy, too. Haven't had that in a while.

I flip through it. Principal's a Takane Shijou. Beautiful platinum blonde. Famous. Hot bod. Killer voice. Classy lady. Idol. Single, highly eligible bachleorette. Wants a bodyguard pretending to be her... cousin. Usually, i'd be meeting the principal a week before, getting to know her, drill her in basic escape techniques and practicing the act beforehand. This job was going to be... tricky.

I sigh and prepare the usual kit. Hopefully, nothing supernatural will happen this time round. I silently curse my strange employer.

"Miss Shijou, I presume? Might I say you are looking very fabulous for the evening."

"I am? Oh my." A blush. A gentle smile. The way her dress accentuates her figure. It reminds me of- I take hold of my thoughts.

"I'm surprised he sent someone of my age to me. I was expecting someone a bit younger." the beautiful idol mused.

"Sweet young things are a rare commodity. Besides, I was the closest he could tap." I reply respectfully.

I escort her to the waiting car. It's a luxury sedan, an up-armored BMW Z3. Good speed, sleek black finish and bulletproof. I can only hope the driver's good.

"I'm terribly sorry about this. You need to relax, but I'm going to need a bit of information." My tone is firm, but apologetic. "Are there any suspicious people to look out for? Any of your acquaintances acting weirdly? Are there any threats, death threats or otherwise, in the past two weeks? Rivals? Stalkers?"

"For the most part, no. There's just one to pay attention to: One of the sponsors. His name is Lance Kilgore. He's a big, gaudy black guy. He's loud, brash and surrounded by women. I have no idea how he got them, but..." Takane looks out of the car window, as if deep in thought.

"That'll do. Thank you. And now, perhaps, a topic of your choosing. I am supposed to be your cousin, after all." I smile.

The trip to the manor was short and interesting. Idols are not supposed to know so much abiut the Superhero Power Hour, much less state a favorite Kamen Rider.

We arrive at the party soon enough. I assume the role of her refined cousin with ease. So far so good.

Then the extravagance of the rich hits me. I'm quite used to displays of wealth, but even I stop to whistle at this. Everything's immaculate. The food. The decoration. My principal, talking to some other idols she knows. The big black guy dressed in gaudy clothes, surrounded by women, wearing distasteful jewellery. I keep an especially close eye on him.

There's plenty of time to take in and enjoy the sights. And as long as the situation remains as it is, there's nothing to fear. Still, I notice security is tighter than usual. Probably because of that incident.

I shrug off my paranoia. The party's good, the sights are fine, the harem is unsheathing knives and saying strange words- FUCK. It was the Shitstorm at the Emperor's all over again.

I scan the exits. All surrounded and guarded. I mentally take stock of the situation. The odds did not look good. If something didn't happen soon, shit was gonna hit the fan at terminal velocity.

You are currently dressed to the nines as a Maid - a docile, servile creature tasked to perform the most menial of duties, namely attending to your Master's needs, wants and whims. Your Master in question is a seventeen year old idol superstar by the name of Minase Iori, a brown-haired beauty who seems to have taken quite a liking to you. She had been invited to an event that involves the city's upper crust - its cream of the crop, financially speaking - and their efforts to spend as much money possible without actually doing the trust fund-deficient world around them any noticeable good. Your mission as you have been paid to accomplish it is to make sure that not one hair is harmed on Minase Iori's head, and that she comes home to your apartment relatively unraped and unmolested.

All seemed to be going nice and well enough until you met Lance Kilgore, a musclebound mountain of meat with a diamond-encrusted shark's grin and clothes that would be completely in place in a police lineup - or in a morgue. You were all too ready to ignore him and call it a night then when it is brought to your attention that he has a Golden Weapon - two thick bracers with a double-headed eagle motif, their wings spread and curled around the gold encasing his wrists. A meeting with him that nearly resulted in frustrated homicide on your part confirmed their status as a gift from that crazy broad from your nightmares, the one with the dark eyes and pink hair. You're not too sure how he got those bracers, but you're sure that you'll be looting them from his corpse in some later point in time. All you need is a clean line of sight, a good rifle, and him anywhere in the range of three miles from your vantage point.

The first complicating factor is that you're not outside. You've learned countless times that when you want to kill someone who does not want to be killed, getting them outside and in the open is the easiest way to get them to take their well-deserved (and paid for) dirt nap. Sure, they can run, and cover's going to be a bitch to shoot around, but at least he's not hunkered down inside some sort of safehouse or bunker.

No, Lance Kilgore did not have the decency to start this shit with you in the open. Instead, he did it in the middle of the event you're supposed to be babysitting Iori - inside an upscale mansion's ballroom hall. All its exits sealed in by heavily-armed, heavily-equipped operators who has that sharp look that says that they spend nine hours of their lives in an internet forum arguing about trigger discipline.

The second complicating factor are the bystanders. Your quick head count gives you two hundred civilians stuck in this mess with you. Two hundred people that have nothing to do with this whatsoever except being in the wrong place at the wrong time. Two hundred souls who will, most likely, not live long enough to see the next day.

The third complicating factor are Lance Kilgore's concubines. Wives, lovers, you're not particularly concerned what they call themselves. Blank-eyed living dolls, dressed scandalously and lewdly, their grins shining like the smiles on their knives. Bloody tears trickling down their cheeks. They are thirty in number, and you doubt that even one of them knows just what they're doing. Or if they realize that they're already dead.

Finally, the fourth complicating factor - and the worst one yet - is that your Principal has to be involved in this mess. This shit does not fly, not with you. You're alright with attempts on your life - hell, it's something you expect every week, if not everytime you go on assignment. But whenever things like this that should not involve the safety of your Principal actually do, it's then that you feel just a little bit frustrated. Maybe even mad.

After all, it's your bread and butter he's fucking with.

Lance Kilgore himself - after his thunderous declaration of turning the ballroom hall into a charnel house, dedicating it to an unnamed entity you feel that you're quite acquainted with - is nowhere to be seen, at first. That is, until you look up - and it's there that you see Lance Kilgore slowly floating down from the ceiling, held aloft by what looks to be wings made out of flames sprouting out from his bracers.

They disappear after a few feet of hovering - and Kilgore's massive bulk drops to the floor. You shield your eyes from the resulting flash of gold light as he slams a now gold-encased fist - the bracers seemingly expanding into gauntlets, folding over his fist, plating over his fingers and knuckles - to break his fall. The very mansion shudders underneath you at the impact, and some cry out as they stumble.

He barks out a laugh, the sound guttural and rough - and he gestures with a gauntleted fist at his captive audience. His stare seeking you out for a moment, his bejeweled shark's grin gleaming.

"Bleed these motherfuckers," is what you hear him snigger in his contemptuous, drawling patois. The words have barely left his mouth when his concubines howl and screech and shriek, knives flashing as they spring forward as one. Jumping on panicking suits, straddling prone idols, bearing fleeing bystander into the floor. Knives slicing into flesh with quiet, almost dignified hisses, in contrast to the not so dignified shrieking, screaming, crying and begging.

And it's then that the operators start to open fire into the very crowd that had felt safe under their protection only a few moments ago.

You shout and scream at your little group - Iori, Fabiola, Garcia - and push and pull them towards the nearest exit. In the screaming, shrieking chaos, you see both Takane dragging an unconscious and bloody Chihaya with her, her face set in a determined expression - and you grab her upper arm, shoving her towards Fabiola just as you yourself advance.

The Golden Desert Eagle snaps into your hand all too readily. And this time, you don't deny it. You don't begrudge it.

The operator guarding the entrance you're shoving your little entourage into has barely raised his weapon when you've blown his entire digestive system out behind him, the greasy snakes of his intestines noisily flopping against the door. Another shot reduces his entire face into a permanent wound channel the size of a cantaloupe, and throws his corpse hard enough against the teak portal that it throws it open.

You scream at your little group of VIPs, roughly shoving them through one way out of this abattoir, not caring if they stumble or fall or complain as they step over your latest victim in a while. You ignore Iori's frightened look that she gives you - and you ignore how she flinches as you thrust your smartphone in her hands. You tell her to call Kyoko and say the word Red, and make sure the one-eyed bitch understands.

Fabiola, who looked as if she was taken by surprise by the entire thing, looks at you huffily. "I suppose you can be forceful if you want to, Pretend Maid."

what if they experienced life when they were controlled as being a prisoner in their own mind? experiencing everything that happened but completely unable to do anything about it, how many years of that would an ordinary person be able to take before breaking apart?

You hear Iori stammering into your smartphone, sobbing Kyoko's name and the name of a particular color again and again - and it's with a shouted expletive that you hear the magical girl at the other end of the line sever the connection. Iori looks up at you, tearfully, before managing to say that Kyoko would be on her way soon.

"B-but...Chiaki-san, w-what about the people in ther? What are we going to do? W-what about Miki-san, and Haruka-san, and Makoto-san--"

"I-It's okay, Iori-san. Chiaki-san will save them." Garcia, his cheek splattered with blood, says awkwardly but firmly, stepping forward. "Chihaya-san is unconscious, but I think she'll be alright. Takane-san is alright too, but I think she's in shock. We need to get away from here, p-probably to a hospital--"

Despite the situation, Fabiola smiles, just as she slides out what appears to be a Benelli M1 Super 90 riot shotgun from the back of her dress, the sling on it sporting a heavy bandolier of crimson shells. With practiced ease, she loads a handful into the firearm, quick enough that you're impressed.

"You've exceeded my expectations, young Master." Fabiola smiles, not unkindly, to Garcia. The blonde young man simply blushes, before shaking his head. "M-mine too, I guess," he stammers after a moment. He then looks at you, eyes hard. "You'll save them, right, Chiaki-san?"

You nod after a moment. It's then that you pull your MK 22 from its holster concealed behind your ribbon and drop it into his hands.

He looks up at you, confused. You explain, curtly and quickly, that you are counting on him and Fabiola to get the three idols out of the mansion. Kill anyone who stops you, get somewhere safe outside, and stay in cover from snipers.

Garcia's eyes go wide at this, and you hear him audibly swallow as he looks down at the cold metal firearm in his hand.

"Count on us, Pretend Maid. Consider this collateral." Fabiola grins. "Upon my life, I swear that I will protect them until my last breath. They will come to no harm." She hefts her massive shotgun onto her shoulder, before offering a gloved hand to you.

"Die well, Pretend Maid."

"Kill many, Fabiola Iglesias." You reply, and you see them off as they run and stumble away from you, to get out of the mansion as fast as they can. Fabiola at the lead, with Garcia watching their tail.

You turn towards the door you'd just closed on a bloodbath - and in doing so, you miss Iori giving you one last desperate look before she is dragged along by Takane and Garcia.

The Golden Desert Eagle is warm in your hand as you step back into the ballroom hall, locking the door behind you as you do so.

The Bloody Baron.

What do you do?

The idea is to limit his mobility. If he gets a good hit in on us with those fists of his, it's over. In addition, we aren't exactly great in melee, as our fight with the katana chick (Kirika?) showed. This time, we don't have sniper support

We need to keep him away and somehow deal with the people who are inevitably going to be shooting at us.

If it won't work, we will at least have his attention. Likely the attention of everyone else, too. Which is a good time to use a flashbang.

So - limit BB's mobility, limit the capability of mooks to use their superior firepower (flashbang), shoot on the move and don't stop, with the occassional grenade to spice things up and keep them from ganging up on us?

Kirika was fast all the time. Kilgore is probably significantly slower, but can still move quickly in short bursts when he wants. Either way, closing into CQC with him is very bad. We should tell Kyoko about this as soon as possible.

While he CAN fight without the use of much of his vital organs, he may not be able to walk without his legs or punch without his arms. Just to be safe, we'll assume that his limbs will continue to function even if severed from his body. However, his whole gimmick is being a steel wall of flesh and sinew, and injuring him may be a feat in itself.

This may force us to use the golden sword if the opportunity presents itself.

Hence the kneecaps. If you're wrong, and he DOES have a ludicrous speed edge, he won't anymore and we can take it from there.
If you're right, we can just comfortably stay away and shoot him to death.

Anyhow, we need to identify the greater threat here - either it's BB, or the mooks around us. We could conceivably use our timestop to paint a bullet through every brain here, and let the Baron go up on a grenade pyre, but it likely won't be as easy.

Or, we could use our Emergency Drop Pod Beacon Cross, leave the mooks for our ally (I think it's reasonable to presume that the Space Marine armor is immune to small arms fire, and nobody has an AM rifle indoors) and deal with the Baron.

Lance Kilgore laughs as he notices your arrival - and so do the rest of his entourage and the remaining operators under his employ. You give the bloody scenery a cursory look - it seems that some of the guests had actually been armed guards, and they had died valiantly trying to protect their own clients. Some of them had been successful in taking down some of Kilgore's wives, while others had moderate success in their attempt to dispatch some of the operators themselves. All in all...not a bad death, you surmise.

"Well hello - what do we have here?" Kilgore's purring voice carries all the way from his end of the ballroom to yours. The Desert Eagle heavy in your hand, gleaming from the amber lighting from above. "Do my eyes deceive me? Is it, in fact, the timid maid from earlier, with the gun I want in her hands, actually returning to this...glorious sacrificial chamber?" He spreads his gauntleted hands wide, arms out. "I was more than content to let you go, but think that another gift is to fall into my hands at the moment of my ascension! Come closer, young one, and give me what I so richly deserve!"

Kilgore grins at this, revealing teeth pinked with blood.

"Look, dear girl. Look. This is all for her. All these lives. All these souls. All for her. Now she cannot ignore me, now she cannot deny what is rightfully mine." The howling and worshiping of his wives reach a deafening crescendo as they raise their arms around him, fingers trailing blood on his robes, on his clothes. Marking him with bloody fingerprints. "There will be more, once she grants me the boon I've been praying for."

You stop ten paces away from Kilgore. Knowing full well that gunmen have you in their sights the moment you stepped onto the accursed floor. Knowing full well that the wrong move could have your day ruined more than it had ever right to be.

You know all that, but you're not that concerned at the moment.

All you know is that you've heard all of that before. Those same exact words, somehow. Lance Kilgore, spouting spooky monkey talk direct from someone's nightmares. Yours.

It's then that you look up at Lance - the beast of a man grinning at you in anticipation - before you surprise him with a smile of your own as you slowly and carefully shove the Desert Eagle back into its holster. Your two hands taking handfuls of your skirt - and it's then that you bow into a proper curtsy, one foot primly placed in front of the other as you raise your gathered skirt up by a mere inch or two.

And you close your eyes as the entire world explodes into a bright, blinding, searing star.

His Charm-fu is strong, potentially, but what you are missing here is his focus. He's not like MidoriEmi was; that's not his signature move or anything. He's a brawler first and formost, Fabolia told us that. Being compelled doesn't mean full control, either; frankly, we've dealt with that before. Controlled, forced, 'blinked and then found we couldn't' are all much stronger terms to describe full mind control... uh... not that I know anything about how one writes that.

I'll presume that was meant for me.
Perhaps it isn't his signature move, but he's managed to use it to accumulate thirty of these idols as some sort of demon harem. He controlled them all at once. He's going to be adept at using it.
And the wording may mean that we were only urged to do it, but then we could have just not done it, or had a plan when we did. But we did it, and it was stated we didn't have a plan, we were just doing what we were told. That sounds like more than just him hinting at us, "Hey, little girl, walk over here!"

Even with your eyes closed, you could still feel the migraine-bright sting of the combined explosion of light made by five flashbangs detonating at the same exact time.

Even with the anguished screaming and panicked yelling from each and every one of your victims - Kilgore roaring his anger and disbelief at what had just happened, at how you were supposed to be ensnared the moment he touched you, the moment he looked at you - you could still hear the giggling of a young woman with pink hair and sunless eyes, whispering in your ear.

"Kill them, Homura-chan. Kill them all."

She's been there, you realize. She's been there all along.

And you obey.

You will never forgive yourself for this, not by a long shot.

It depends on whether you can handle/like slice-of-life and cute girls doing cute things (and the cast is pretty damn big, so that's a lot of girls). Not a harem series, thankfully; it focuses on an idol production company as it slowly gains popularity. Starts off a little slow and mildly schizophrenic, but it picks up after a few episodes.

You move smoothly, the most fluid you've ever moved before. You kill as if you've rehearsed this entire sequence countless times, as if this is how it should be, and nothing else. It is as if you had spent your entire time asleep, and it is only now that you have been roused to do what you're meant to do.

The Golden Desert Eagle is back in your hand, just as you tug free your combat knife from its sheathe lashed to your boot. One bullet for every operator, each one finding its mark without you so much as aiming for a second. One quick swipe of the knife, across the neck, for every concubine tethered to Kilgore. Laying open muscle. Throat. Larynx. Bone. Blood spurting with every life you take, with every kill you secure. You do this in complete silence, your focus unbreakable.

You do not even miss a beat as you reload. You toss your knife somewhere high up. A sharp mortis-cry - and the sound of a body crashing brokenly into the marble tiles - confirms your accuracy.

You end the rest of the concubines. Point-blank shots, just as they regain their bloody-tracked sights and launch themselves at you. Each one suddenly halting in mid-air as if suddenly slamming into an invisible wall suddenly set in their paths. Pulping their organs and spraying them out as crimson mulch behind them.

At this, Lance had shrank back. He'd regained his own sight much earlier - but even with his history of carnage, the extent of the massacre he'd orchestrated - he was not expecting this. He had not been expecting the frail, humble maid from earlier to make short work of his highly-paid operators - and his cadre of brainwashed murderers.

"Your...your eyes..." He gasps, backpedaling.

You don't need to look. You already know.

The disturbing thing is that you don't care anymore.

That said, I'm not sure why we're feeling bad from opening up in the middle of the room like this. We killed that first witch back in Mami's apartment without flinching, and NOTHING has even hinted so far that the wives are able to be saved.

This scene needs something more divine. You have to imagine it in slow-mo and Murderface whirling in a shooty and stabby dance through the ranks of namless goons while THIS is playing:

"MURDERFACE!" A voice shouts behind you. It's Kyoko, still in her butler costume, one of her tri-pointed spears in her hand. You hear her run towards you - before slowing to a stop as she looks around. "Murderface, I know I'm late, but I bumped into Iori and her pals earlier, I had to get them into the car, and--" You hear her curse underneath her breath. "What the fuck...? M-Murderface, I thought you needed backup, but--"

"Y-you killed them," Lance Kilgore stutters, dropping down to his knees in front of you. All his bluster earlier - of worshipping the ruinous powers - gone, just like that. "M-my girls. You killed every one of them like it didn't even matter to you--"

No. No, it didn't.

And now it was his turn to join them.

"N-no...m-mercy, please, I don't want to die--"

You loathe begging.

Another moment, and you curse as the shot goes wide wide as Kyoko suddenly wrenches your arm back. The round smashing a hole into the ceiling.

"MURDERFACE! WHAT THE HELL ARE YOU DOING?!" Kyoko screams at you, pushing you off. "You can't kill someone like that! They've surrendered! We disarm them and take them to the Silent Room for interrogation! Don't you remember?!"

He deserves to die, you hear yourself say. His rights, if he ever had any, will be read at his funeral.

It's then that you feel Kyoko's fist crash right into your mouth, knocking your glasses off in the impact and sending you toppling into the blood-soaked floor below.

"I am NOT taking that shit from you, Murderface! Now get yourself back together or I'm...I'm telling Mami on your ass!"

...Well. Fuck. You forgot how hard Kyoko could punch. You think she knocked a tooth loose there.

You blink as Pinky's laughter fades from your ears, the crimson mist in your eyes also disappearing.

You get up just as Kyoko secures Kilgore, aiming the tip of her spear against the stunned man's throat - while another spear snakes its way around his arms, holding them fast together with its chained sections. You stagger back shakily to your feet as you hear her murmur something about going crazy like Kirika.

"M-man. Murderface, I..." Kyoko's voice is shaky, trembling, despite her best efforts to sound even. "Jesus. Look what you did. Not even Sayaka at her worst..."

"Murderface, what's wrong with you?" Kyoko turns to you, her one crimson eye searching your own. Looking for reassurance, that her friend hasn't gone crazy. "Is...is it that golden thing, again? Is the same thing happening to Kirika happening to you too?"

How do you respond?

I didn't mind the tracks. I saw the whole thing as a single scene where Chiaki had to react based on what was already done.

And honestly, there's not much different we could've chosen to do, either. Everyone was already dead, and the available actions would've been "kill them in which of the following ways?"

By making it a "railroad" he just saved us all time and empty choices.

No, I don`t think something from Penumbra matches the mood and feeling. Noir doesn`t autimatically mean depressing and shit, or.. well. not the same kind of of depressing.

Besides the Max-Payne-Theme I kind of think that parts of the Saya no Uta Theme feel earily close this. But if you think that guy who is responsible for Madoka actually had his hand in Saya na Uta, too, it actually statrs making sense.

You look at your own puzzled reflection on the Desert Eagle's surface. Half your face is smeared with blood, along with most of the front of your uniform - but you know that the blood isn't your own, not by a long shot. Still, to see yourself in such a manner - right after doing all that...

You look back up at Kyoko, at your confused friend who you know is only concerned about you because...well, because you're friends, somehow. You're not the easiest to get along with, and you're certainly not the life of any party or conversation. Being friends with you is like stirring dried concrete.

But regardless. She needs an explanation.

A good one.

Just like you yourself need one, too.

Finding your voice, finally, you murmur that her guess may be correct. You tried your best, but...

You glance down at the Desert Eagle, before ejecting the magazine, letting it drop onto the floor, and then removing the chambered round from its breech.

"Don't tell Iori. Or...or Mami." You hear yourself say. "Please."

Kyoko looks at you for what seems like an age and nods. Quietly. Before pulling out her cellphone and dialing Kyuubey's number.

"Gonna call for an evac unit," She says after a moment. "This big bastard's going to need one. Probably a cleanup crew too, this place is a mess."

You nod as you look around for the remains of the wet bar. You need a drink. You need to sit down. Both at the same time, hopefully.

It's only then that you hear Pinky's laughter, again.

The blood still pooling on the floor, soaking into your clothes, dripping from the corpses - suddenly moving, gathering, curling into crimson tendrils and gathering where Kilgore knelt.

"She...she comes," Kilgore drools. His eyes completely black. "I...I no longer wish for this. I cannot accept--"

There's a sharp crack as his entire skull is jerked back, before it lolls forward as his body stands up. The chain-spear securing his hands suddenly catching purple flame and dissolving as if it never were. Kyoko's one eye going wide as she steps back, and you join her as Kilgore's corpse floats upwards, arms outstretched as if being crucified in midair.

"What the fuck--" Kyoko starts to say, before the entire form of Lance Kilgore explodes in a bloody shower - leaving behind a patchwork of flesh and bone in his place. The gauntlets still affixed to his fists.

And it's then that the corpses and the blood fly up towards the skeleton. Replacing what has been lost. Building what had been destroyed. A gruesome perversion of a resurrection. Limbs, faces, torsos, organs - made up of bodies dead and dying.

The daemon that falls, feet first, into the ground before you is over ten feet tall, the faces of the dead screaming from its very skin. Jagged ribs form its teeth, twisted bones forming its horns.

"Well. There's...we're fucked, aren't we, Murderface?"

You take this moment to drain the contents of your hip flask in one go, tossing the empty bottle to the side afterwards.

"Run."

What do you do?

Well, shit. If we run, he's not gonna, like, stop being some sort of bloodthirster (lol at autocorrect asking if I meant to type "Bloodthirstier"). That just means he's going to get out and go do havoc somewhere else.

I think we need to stop him here, now, somehow. Maybe now is the time to call in reinforcements. Press the cross, transform to magical mode, and dig in.

Is... is it railroading that we keep getting the golden gun? Or is that THE ONLY FUCKING WAY YOUR GM CAN TELL YOU IN A WRITTEN FORMAT THAT YOU KEEP UNCONSCIOUSLY GRABBING THE GUN?

This I'll agree to. Until Kirara's Masamune appears in our shield when we transform, making us dual weilding golden weapons (which would be SWEET but terrible on our sanity score) just like Kilgore the demon prince, I'm going to assume that we can leave it behind but it's just hard to.

This.
The creppy little space-twat mae it pretty clear that of we don`t do it he would give the sword to Sayaka to let her test it and I hopefully don`t have to mension how bad of an idea that would be.

Still, a paranoid part of me actually thinks that if you tie up the hints that Kyoko has been droping together, it seems awfully clear that Sayaka is not herself right now. Either because she is right before witching out on our ass or because she has a golden weapon already.

This has always been a quest more reliant on writefaggotry than anything else, and i approve of how Deculture handled the situation. I am reading this for the delicious convulted story, the down on her luck protagonist and the genre mixture (40k, madoka, noir story), not for giving much input.

"Hey, Kyuubey? Yeah, we're going to have to cancel that evac." You hear Kyoko calmly speaking to the boss on her phone as the both of you pound your way out of the ballroom hall - a moment before Kilgore's new form smashes right through the door, taking with it a good part of the ceiling, the wall surrounding the door, and a good part of the ballroom itself with a sound akin to an explosion. "Oh, er, I don't think we need it just yet. What we do need is backup." You throw the door to the main hall open just as you come upon it, Kyoko squeezing in after you. A moment, and her trademark barrier crashes into existence behind you, forming up against the door, reinforcing it. "How many squads? N-no, I want you to get everyone. No, you didn't hear me wrong. I said every--I SAID EVERYONE--"

Kilgore - or rather, the monster - smashes right through shield, masonry and furniture as it continues its relentless pursuit, its crimson eyes focusing on the both of you as its footsteps crush what remained of the mansion. You'd already transformed into your Magical Girl Costume - and you're secretly glad that your Shield is right back where it belongs.

In any case, you and Kyoko have decided to lead the monster into a chase around the house - you can't, by good conscience, escape without taking care of this problem first. Hence the delaying tactic of leading it on a wild magical girl chase while you wait for reinforcements. You can't finish this one off on your own, not even with the Desert Eagle.

Unconsciously, you clasp the golden cross Misaka had given you just before leaving for this disaster of a mission. Your thumb immediately finding the hidden button at the very center of the icon.

There's a click, and a small whining sound. Followed by a stinging crackle of electricity coming from the piece of jewelry.

You turn to Kyoko to ask her about this, when you realize that your butler friend had already started to trying to fight the beast up close. A spear in each hand, launching herself right up into the monster's face.

There's a gout of blood - and a roar of anguish - as the first spear finds its mark, burying itself into Kilgore's eye. You see Kyoko try and impale the brain through that - but the beast catches her in its grip and tosses her like a ragged doll. Her body slamming against a wall with a rather sickening crunch, before sliding down rather pathetically to the floor.

You'd have screamed Kyoko's name, if the sudden explosion of searing immaterium right beside you didn't knock you off your feet.

You scramble quickly back onto your feet as the dust cloud slowly settles - a giant silhouette, hunched over and tusked, looming over you. You cough as the symbols on it become all the clearer - an eight-pointed star. Arrows pointing upwards, downwards. On its right pauldron, a skull with bat wings cresting from its sides. On the left, the relief of a snarling lion.

[TELEPORTATION COMPLETED.] The giant intones in a deep, speaker-corrupted voice, its eyes igniting with crimson light. [DEATH TO THE FALSE EMPEROR.]

What...what did Misaka just give you, again?

Where was I? Right. Screaming demon harem, big gaudy black guy going nuts, screaming about the flesh of fallen angels, some pink goddess and people shuffling off meeting James Earl Jones. I mean Death.

It was the fucking Emperor job all over again. And this time, I was all alone. She'd better not die here, or I'm not getting paid. That's even worse.

"Takane, get down!" I yell, as I instinctively pull out the first weapon I got my hands on: a beautiful Para-Ordnance P14-45. The better M1911A barks twice, sending more than enough 45ACP to stop a beserk Filipino warrior twice. The shots ring true, and her would-be murderer was... disarmed. At the shoulders.

I hear a giant mighty explosion. I turn, and saw one of the guards suck a giant-caliber bullet. And the report of other firearms, followed by a lot of screaming.

I approach my principal, two things firmly in my mind: some of the hired help were packing serious heat, and this wasn't the fucking Emperor mission. For one thing, the demon harem was mortal.

I only suggested it because Deculture wanted suggestions.

As it is, if the Chaos Terminator in front of us is really a Chaos Terminator, won't that end badly for us? I have not heard nice things about the Night Lords.

"Miss Shijou, I do believe it is time to leave." I deadpanned. While I gun down another knife-wielding maniac. Ten bullets left.

I look at her teary face, then down to the blue-haired idol she was clutching. She looks to be in pretty bad shape.

"She'll live, Takane, but only if you get her out." I wasn't lying. But the guard I dispatched was, with a bullet to his head. I silently thank the Glaser Corporation. Eight left.

"Promise?" Dammit Takane, you keep reminding me of my wife.

"I'll stay alive. Take my ring. Wait by the car. If I'm not there by thirty minutes, drive off and get to a hospital." I hand her a fairly ornate ring. She needed no second time.

Good. Now that she's relatively safe, I find a safe corner and speed dial my employer. The smooth, melliflous voice of the mutant cat never ceases to piss me off.

"QB."
"Rogue Trader."
"The flesh of fallen angels. What the hell."
"Lance Kilgore."
"Big, gaudy black man, surrounded by knife-wielding demonbitches?"
"I see. I will be getting a bill for this, will I not?"
"If I survive. I'm gonna have to ask for more."
"Done."
"Just thought you'd like to know. Also the whole place is a charnel house. I'm gonna need a favor and ask for medical support."
"It's on the way as we speak. By the way, how did you survive? The place is surrounded and the guards have live rounds."
"Luck."

I click the phone shut. Being rude to your employer is a no-no, but I had spent too much time already. Time to blow the joint.

I head for the nearest exit, putting down any resistance I could find. The sound of gunfire, screaming and the stench of blood was everywhere.

It was not until I reach a suitable exit that I notice that my dress shirt was ruined. And a very dizzy feeling. Oh shit. I hope the ambulance arrives s-

"I hired him to be,my bodyguard. He's been very professional about it." Takane explained to my very shocked wife.

"Um, what she said. It's the truth."

"Honey, I really appreciate this, but Miss Shijou and I really need to discuss the issue of payment..." I pet her head. "There's enough time in the evening. I'll be yours then." She reluctantly leaves.

I feel something familiar being pressed into my hand. "Thanks. Now where was I. Ah yes. I still can't believe you actually like Fourze..."

Misaka has all sorts of wonderful trinkets and disturbing oddities
Her having a teleport homer that summons a night lord doesn't surprise me at all.

And given the password for our suit was Malleus, so I don't think it was the night lord one.

You are right about the 40k equipment so far though, but we do work for the assassinorum, are a vindicare, associate with calliduses, eversors and were told we might be in line for war master.

I think there might be a bit more bleed through than just ours given that.

Don't worry, this was actually covered. In... one of the early threads, like 2 or 3 it was mentioned in passing that we had a memory of pulling a bolter from the shield before the game started.

Once we met Misaka, we found that she had been working on repairing and rebuilding a suit of terminator armor.

We had (before the game started) pulled a semi trailer sized crate out of the shield in the past, and she has been apparently rebuilding the things inside. There was apparently no one actually IN said armor, though, as that wasn't mentioned at all.

Later, we met with QB at the office, and a bunch of Assassnorium names started flying around, and we found out we were a Vindicare and the other girls were various other ranks.

Now we have the armor, which I'm guessing is either a robot or Misaka inside the armor.

Either way, the groundwork for this has been laid down for 16+ threads.

I have a sinking feeling that maybe we did. First a Chaos daemon. Then a Chaos terminator (albiet it's apparently a Night Lord who doesn't like their own faction for some reason).

We Chaos now.

Yeah I remember that but I actually think that isn't Misaka on there nor is it our armour.

It sounded like our armour was more like a loyalist factions such as the black templars or something and given the activation code was malleus it backs that up.

Plus we don't actually know what kind of bolter we pulled out given there are all the various patterns and marks used by both sides or if it was an astartes bolt pistol

I think it may well be that we pulled a night lord from the warp which may be connected to this world, the giant grief seed coud be a daemon planet as well

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and things aren't exactly looking up for your life expectancy at the moment. You haven't been helping with the alcohol and painkiller abuse, not to mention letting a particular pink-haired bitch from the afterlife get under your skin and turn you into some sort of bloodthirsty serial killer - but this could be a turning point in your career.

It's been a rough night. Getting shanghaied into a maid uniform was one thing, babysitting a two-time Principal through six hours of exorbitant capitalist excess was quite another. Sure, there were some interesting bits here and there, the most interesting of which where you managed to vent some steam by ventilating a handful of operators while giving a group of shrieking concubines another happy smile just below their chins - but things may be crashing to a very abrupt halt very soon.

Of course that all depends on the twelve, thirteen-feet tall demon jonesing for some delicious Magical Girl snacks. He's obviously hungry, that you can tell - but the fact that he's also angry as fuck doesn't escape you. You'd be pissed off too if you had a brass tri-point spear still lodged in your skull after a failed lobotomy. You should thank your best friend Kyoko Sakura later - that is, if she's still alive afte this. If you're still alive after this.

And just to mix things up so it doesn't get boring, you actually pressed the button on that golden cross your arms dealer Misaka gave you. Now, you like her and all and she's got your best interests at heart, bless her soul, but sometimes you just have to step back and think: do I want to be a guinea pig to untested technology again? You can't believe you've forgotten the lesson you learned, way back then. Whisky-infused pancakes. What an idea.

They had to lock you in the Silent Room for three months just to get you to go cold turkey and wean you off the damn things.

But what's done is done. You pressed it, and now you must deal with the ten-foot tall giant standing in front of you, a veritable walking tank of black armor gilded with bright, polished bronze.

The elephantine helm coal-black, with crimson light smouldering behind slitted lenses, the red bleeding into the curvature of the tusks jutting out from its snout. Its pauldrons, huge and nigh spherical, displaying jagged markings and the emblems of factions you probably don't want to know about right now. Both its fists are swollen for some reason - almost as big as its own torso, with bulky fists you're sure is made for punching something really hard until it doesn't exist anymore.

You also see what looks like a giant, long-handled hammer with a rectangular head the size of a coffin - one you're sure that you could fit comfortably in and have enough firepower to take over the afterlife - mag-locked to its back, the business end crackling every now and then with black electricity.

All you know is that you summoned it, it's here, and you have to deal with it.

How do you deal?

As wary as you are of the armored giant - hell, you think even Kirika would have second thoughts before even thinking of tangling with this heavily-armed bastard - you bite your lip and decide to place your bets on what Misaka had told you. Press butan, receive friendly walking tank of desecration, she did say. And she hasn't really failed you yet.

There's no time to make nice, anyway. You hear Kilgore roar as it manages to pull out Kyoko's spear from its eye socket - ripping its own eye free from its skull - and it's with a ground-shaking gait that it barrels into your direction.

[COMPLIANCE] It rumbles, its voice like an oncoming storm. Its movements deliberate, almost ponderous, the ground shakes as it turns in place with one step - before suddenly lunging forward. Moving much more faster, much more violently than something of that size should be allowed to move. So quick that you feel the slipstream of its movements kick the hem of your skirt up, which you don't exactly tend to.

You're too busy staring, slack-eyed, as the armored giant slams right into the dragon, head-on, with the force of impact so palpable it blasts outward from their meeting point in an ever-expanding circle of turbulence. Nearly throwing you off your feet again.

[DIE, SLAVE OF THE FALSE EMPEROR] The Terminator blurts in a deafening burst of vox-corrupted voice before smashing one of its heavily-armored fists right into Kilgore's deformed maw - inhuman black blood gouting out as bone, sinew and muscle gives way to unyielding ceramite. Kilgore is smashed through a particularly expensive-looking hall of paintings - and as the armored giant follows suit, it reaches over fluidly with one hand to unlatch the hammer from its back. Gripping it with two fists and advancing, each step shaking the ground.

What do you do? You probably would want to check up on Kyoko, or go and give fire support to your new best friend.

Check on Kyoko. If she's stable but too injured to continue on, contact QB (or whichever forces are coming to reinforce us) and notify them of her position so she can be extracted or receive medical attention. After that, we go and see if we can't snipe Kilgore's eyes while our newly-acquired friend mashes him into the ground.

Or to use the quest terminology, having Kyouko "expire" in the middle of this mission would make things more difficult and would leave Sayaka permanently aiming to shank our kidneys

You decide that the big guy's got this shit locked down, by the way he's currently using Kilgore's head as a hockey puck with that hammer of his - each impact discharging some sort of electricity that makes your teeth each, not to mention wince as it sounds remarkably painful. You turn away from them and hurry towards Kyoko's supine form, the faux butler on her back and currently unconscious.

You take a moment to sweep some dust away from the spot on the floor next to Kyoko, before lying down there as well. Taking this rare opportunity to just take it easy, while an armored giant is doing its level best to reduce a giant daemonic being's face into salsa chunks just the next room over.

A moment's silence, and it's then that you reach over and briefly tap your soul gem against hers - the crimson gem pinned on her lapel sparking as it comes it contacts with yours. Immediately, Kyoko's chest heaves, and her one eye opens, blinking rapidly as she seems to realize just where she is.

"M-Murderface...?" She just manages to say, her voice strained. "What...what're we doing here like this? Why're we on our backs all of a sudden?"

You tell her that she got herself knocked out, and you went along with it so people would think the both of you were just chilling, like this.

"H-hah. Stop...stop trying to be funny, Murderface. It's not funny." She tries to get up, wincing. "...Fuck. Back's broken. Bastard got me good. Ahh, Christ, does this have to happen now...?"

You get up immediately and pat your skirt down for dust. Not that it gets any cleaner, what with all the BLOOD all over your front or anything. You tell her to just stay down - you'll make sure that the backup, whenever it comes in, gets her immediately to Headquarters for repair.

"S-sorry, Murderface." Kyoko looks sheepish, guilty almost. "I....w-was supposed to be your backup and shit. Now I can't even assist." She laughs, lamely. "Some friend I am, huh?"

You glance down at her momentarily, before murmuring a question you've been dying to ask for a while. Well, second to the question about her eye, that is.

"O-of course I consider you one, you fuckin' idiot! What the hell k-kinda question is that? I...nghk.." You hear Kyoko choke as she presses the heel of one hand against her remaining eye, as if trying to physically bar tears from pouring out. "T-this is just great, isn't it...? You mean you never thought of me as one--"

"M-Murderface..."

You could have said more, of course. You could have told her that even if you've been your insufferable self the entire time, she had stuck with you, and even volunteered for this operation even though she didn't actually have to. She'd done things for you that you didn't think anyone would even think of doing - even getting her back broken for you.

Friends like that never come around unless the universe decides you really need them.

You could tell her a lot more things, but you save it for later. You are, after all, not planning on saying your late goodbyes just about now.

Raising your right arm, your left hand grasping the rim of your shield - you rack the clicking device once. It dispenses a fully-loaded AK-47 - a simple enough rifle for someone who doesn't use guns all that much.

You place the rifle right beside her, telling her that if any of Kilgore's goons show up, she can defend herself ably with it. Just remember not to go full auto - burst fire is the key.

"H-heh. Alright. T-thanks, Chiaki." Kyoko smiles weakly, hugging the rifle to her form with two limp arms. "I'll make sure to drop one or two of them for you."

Good girl.

You turn back to where the daemon and the armored giant had gone - you can still hear them pummeling each other, but you detect that there's a bit more of angry roaring coming from Kilgore than the squealing barks of pain he'd been shrieking earlier.

You quickly run towards the wall-sized cavity they've been coring through the mansion's numerous corridors. You need to arm yourself.

After a few minutes' more of running - and backtracking as you realize that the two are just literally wrecking the entire mansion - you finally come upon the two warring behemoths in the mansion's main dining hall. The entire place already a shambles, that long table you always see in shows featuring the homes of the rich and stupid broken in three diferrent places.

You also see something else that's broken in three pieces, too - your big friend's right arm, embedded in a wall, the armored hand still gripping the haft of the hammer, frozen stiff in rigor mortis. What's left of his upper arm is hanging from underneath his pauldron, a sheaf of wires sparking intermittently from the nearly-shattered hemispherical shoulderpad.

Kilgore's face is barely recognizable, and you see that he's limping on his right foot - the limb reduced to a battered, twisted appendage that snaps sickeningly every movement it makes with it. But even then, you see that the daemon's got the upper hand here - its golden-plated claws pummelling the armored giant back, gouging deep scars in the ceramite, dimpling the surface with gruesome dents. One of its eye slits have already been shattered, the crimson light shining there no longer.

He's dying for you, you realize. Which gives you one shot at getting it right.

You give your Soul Gem a last-minute check before doing anything else. As far as you can see, the darkness inside it hasn't accumulated much, but something's changed with the gem, somehow. You probably don't need to use a Grief Seed at the moment - and it's then that you catch your reflection on the amethyst's surface.

...You're going to have to hide these eyes somehow.

You rack the shield again, as you try to think of something that would be powerful enough to end this little charade. The Shield has always been fickle with what it gives you. Sometimes it gives you what you need, sometimes it's a completely different thing entirely. It's never gotten you killed, but it has gotten more than enough people around you reduced to nothing but smithereens.

The crunching of gears, your Shield automatically sliding back into its original position - and you open your eyes as you feel the weight of a freshly-loaded Barrett XM500 Semi-Automatic Anti-Material Rifle on your hands. Wasting no time as you drop to one knee - not bothering to jump behind cover - you brace against the wall behind you, click the firearm off its safety, and aim through the scope. Kilgore has his back turned to you, still busy mauling your new buddy.

the general understanding seems to be that we lose the black eyes whenever someone brings us down from a pink-induced killing high. and yet we've got them again. course, it might just be residual warp-taint in this instance.

You bite your lip as you center your sights on Kilgore. At this distance, training the crosshairs exactly is overkill - you know that as long as you manage to hit, the damage dealt will be enough.

But you make sure. That's what a professional is all about, even if you have to do this in a bloody maid costume. The only thing that would make this even more of a perfect hit would be if you stopped time, right now, just to give you a second's worth of satisfaction of seeing his expression as he stares at the .50 round about to utterly destroy him.

As Kilgore draws back a golden fist to deliver the killing blow, it's then that you murmur his name. Loud enough for him to hear from right across the room.

The moment that he looks at you is the moment you pull the trigger.

...You've braced yourself inadequately. The kick of the rifle upsets your aim, throwing it a couple of millimeters off - and you brace for another shot as you see the daemon's right arm shear itself away from the rest of its body with a meaty tearing sound, as if deciding that it was finally done with all this business and deciding to go back to its home planet (where it was direly needed). The arm's journey is stopped halfway due to the massive weight of the golden bangle, and it drops to the ground like a brick. Your ears are ringing from the report, and you are dimly aware of your ears bleeding.

You shoot. Again. This time, half of Kilgore's face is gone. Just gone. Vaporized. Reduced to mist. But he's still roaring. He's still moving.

He launches himself at you as you depress the trigger into the handle. Shifting the rifle from its flat angle to a raised one as you follow the daemon's path towards you. Shooting it again and again and again.

By the time you've emptied the entire magazine into Kilgore, all that lands on you is biological matter and gruesome mulch. His remaining arm - the claws still twitching - falling heavily against the wall beside your head, the metal blades stabbing into the cement a few inches were your face might have been.

It's only after a few moments - they feel like hours - that you let go of the breath you've been holding, and slump back against the wall. Letting the smoking rifle drop from your now slack hands as you let the adrenalin - what's left of it - slowly seep out of your body.

You wait for a few moments before reaching back to draw your pack of cigarettes from your inventory. Your hand shaking slightly as you try and light your cigarette without much success.

You give up after a few moments. You'll light it later when you feel a bit less jittery.

You hear rapid footsteps and shouting - feminine, some of it recognizable - coming your way from the corridor. It must be the backup. Late as always.

What do you do?

Secure golden weapons is top priority, we don't really trust any other meguca getting their hands on them even if it takes a while for the insanity to kick in.

Thank and dismiss terminator. Probably robotic but even so it makes sense to properly dismiss the thing on a job well done.

Be sort of nice if we didn't have to rely on 40k weirdness, but I suspect we're past the the point of no return on that. My compromise would be that we keep to our theme even if Pinky and her corruption is chaos based. Conventional modern day weapons for the modern day time stopping magic girl, smokes, whisky with optional ice cubes, painkillers to dull everything out.

Deagle can climb a wall of dicks though. Even if it's a better class of cheated firearm, the price is too high and this 'test' of QBs got out of control. The corruption we take might not be linked to traditional magic girl corruption of our soul gem and outside of Kuubey's parameters. I think we've safely established these weapons are bad juju and there is no safe way to utilise them without falling into Pinkies plans.

she was literally leaping for joy over being able to shot Kirika to bits, and she's had a black eyes episode.
I won't discount Iori, but to my mind Mami is the one who really matters. She actually knows us and still thinks we're worth knowing. Iori's exposure to us has been much less comprehensive, even if she's sleeping in our bed at the moment.

Except she is still very innocent
She didn't like the idea of shooting Kirika for the effect it would have but because she was a bitch to her and was threatening her friends
She also has had an episode where she seemed to be under something else's control yet not pinky because it wasn't the usual effects one gets for pinky control

Also in just about all cases she has acted like a little sister for chiaki

So i guess I am trying to say it isn't so much she isn't innocent as her perspective on things is fairly screwed

You glance at the half-sprawled, half-sitting armored giant that had taken the brunt of Kilgore's monstrous transformation - one hit of which you're sure that would have pulped your organs, no question about it. And it did so unquestioningly, without hesitation - it simply followed what you told it to do, without even bothering to ask why. The consequences of which are evident in its dented carapace, its scarred pauldrons, and the still-sparking wires that once ran from its shoulder to its arm - which, of course, is so far away from its owner that it's pretty much in another room entirely. Still gripping the massive hammer it had been using with deadly efficiency.

You realize with a small smile that you've got more in common with the walking suit of armor than anyone else you know. You're both good at what you do, you do things you're told to without so much as a complaint (or at least none Kyuubey can hear) - and someday, you're going to be in the same state as it is. Expiring , forgotten and alone in some corner without anyone to even watch you die.

Getting your breath back after a few more moments, you finally pull yourself back up to your feet, joints and muscles aching. You plod slowly towards the immobile giant, one bloody hand reaching up to straighten glasses that aren't there. You murmur a curse underneath your breath, shaking your head as you remember that Kyoko punched it off you - and it's then that you nearly shriek as the armored giant suddenly moves, its servo joints clicking erratically. Standing up with obvious effort, but it does after a few false starts.

[TARGET PURGED] It growls, its speakers infested with static. One of its eyes still dark, the other flickering. [ORDERS?]

In the grim darkness of meguca, there is only war.

So is there any chance of us going back to Noir Magic Girl shenanigans soon? We seem to be getting grim darkness lately, specifically about the time when we completely dropped the tension of a guy and his crazy assassin cult killing a room full of people and traded it for a demon fighting a terminator.

I get that it's a reoccurring reference, but if warhammer weaponry and opponents are going to become common rather then a parallel for our Noir plot we might as well drop the whole pretence of being Noir and call it Grim Dark instead.

Despite that, she still thinks there's something inside that she can nurture and draw out of us. She hasn't fully accepted that we are a coldhearted killer, and there's the possibility for hope for us.

Which is, of course, why she's going to accept a damn wish when we go down hard and QB offers her the chance to help us. Or she'll turn into a witch or something. I foresee no outcome that allows her (or, failing that, one of our other friends) as some sort of Final Boss.

That said, I like Iori, damnit! She's our cuddle bunny! She stays!

The armored giant's elephantine helm, one tusk snapped off, swivels down as if to focus on you as it gives its damage report in a booming roar of vox corruption.

[DAMAGE LEVELS INCURRED CRITICAL, BUT CURRENTLY STABLE. OPERATIONAL STATUS IMPAIRED BUT FUNCTIONAL. TELEPORTATION CURRENTLY DISABLED.]

Well. You didn't get all of that, but it sounds positive, at least. You ask it for more details, just as you try to unsuccessfully wipe the blood from your face with your apron - only managing to smear it around and make you look even more ghastly. You make for wiping your ears free of blood instead - at least your eardrums, having ruptured from earlier, had healed up quickly. You can thank Magical Girl constitution for that at least.

The armored giant seems to hesitate, which is a ridiculous notion, considering its belligerent appearance. [OFFICIAL DESIGNATION IS...TINY PETE, OF THE VIII LEGION. FIRST COMPANY. SERIAL NUMBER UNKNOWN.]

You...don't get that either, but alright. At least it has a name, one that you remember Misaka crowing about when she kept telling you about her latest pet project.

You reach up on tiptoe and trace the eight-pointed star embossed on its chest. You're not all that familiar with these, but they do look quite dangerous. Maybe you should speak to Misaka about giving Tiny Pete a new look.

After a moment of staring, you point it towards the arm it's missing. It growls out its assent before plodding directly for its wayward limb, its footfalls making the very floor tremble with each one.

Tiny Pete. Well, at last you've confirmed that it's not Misaka in there - probably just machine inside, a dummy AI in lieu of an actual wearer. You remember the password your phone gave you. You make a note to try it out when Tiny Pete's all fixed up.

My complaint isn't at the action or lack of it. It's the nature of the action. Rather then fighting a huge boxer with magical gauntlets and his crazy trained harem; we eliminate them in what, three posts and then get a Bloodthirster instead. We didn't even really fight it, we summoned a TERMINATOR on it then shot it after the two traded hits.

My point isn't that the action is lacking, the level of action isn't as important as the cool idea of a chain smoking, monologuing magic girl with nothing to lose dealing with magic girl problems like she's a hard boiled detective/mage.

While we're at it, we knew this demon was instantly trouble by looking at it despite being magic girls who originally were supposed to fight demonic like witches in the first place. We could have fought it, but no. We've got terminator armour to call in and that's the obvious choice.

If that's the direction things are going then fine, that's what people want. It just seems dumb to keep calling this Noir if we're going to drop it for more /tg/ fan favourites.

Clever girl. Yes, yes there are 20 legions. Well, 18 and 2 missing (which I'm sure will not be filled in this quest /sarcasm). We previously thought Tarot Cards, perhaps, but it looks like this is a more relevant number. Which means the Golden Gun being VIII was planned for a while, now. While Tiny Pete's combing the room for his bits, you look around for a reflective surface to check yourself with. Not that you have any illusions of what you look like right now, of course - just that it'd help to be prepared once backup arrives. Less confusion that way.

You find a broken shard of mirror somewhere on the ground, and pick it up carefully. Brushing hair away from your eyes as you stare hard at yourself.

Your eyes are still a bit darker than you're used to, but it seems to be mostly confined to the iris, now. Dark purple's not that much of a deviation from just purple, so you think this might just pass as something the lighting's doing.

You use up a Grief Seed, just to be on the safe side. The impurity in your Soul Gem eradicated, just like that, and the used Seed stashed back into your inventory. Taking your count from 3 to 2.

Some bit of good news, at least - you're able to light the damn cigarette this time. You puff gratefully just as Tiny Pete returns, its hammer locked onto its back and carrying its still-sparking severed arm.

[3/4]

You take another long, desperate drag from your cigarette - and it's then that the backup finally arrives. A complete squad, led by none other than Kumatora herself, the girl you trained. The five girls with her seem to be Eversors too, girls who look fresh out of basic but eager to prove themselves.

Oh, and Kyuubey. Of course. White mutant cat, who doesn't even greet you so much as go directly over to the bracers. Sniffing one of them, before prodding the hand still encased with a paw.

All six Eversor squad members stop and pale at Tiny Pete's appearance, but you shake your head, telling them that he's a friendly. He just looks that way.

"I-If...If you say so, Murderface-sempai." Kumatora replies after a moment, before snapping off a textbook salute. You nod at her instead of returning it, and she continues her address. "I-Ishikawa Kumatora, Eversor, reporting as reinforcements! Although..." Her voice falls as she looks around. Seeing what is little left of Kilgore besides, well, the golden bracers and the meat they're currently encasing, having reverted back into simple bangles with eagle reliefs. "...I don't think you left us anything to kill, Murderface-sempai."

You smile slightly at this, and gesture at Tiny Pete beside you. If they wanted someone to blame, blame him, you say, and they blanch at the idea.

"U-um, well, in any case...I'll just report that Kyoko Sakura-sempai is already on her way back to Headquarters." Kumatora clears her throat. "Minase Iori-san has also been recovered, along with two other VIPs. They say that they know you personally, Murderface-sempai."

Ah. That'd be Garcia and Fabiola.

Now, while I DO actually partially agree that we could have had more with Black Baron, everyone was on board for Magical Girl Madworld Quest, if I recall. And everyone was for the 40k goodies before, earlier in the quest. So, now that it's being provided, now is the time to decide we don't want it?

As long as the in between keeps firmly attached to the human characters, emotions, trials, and tribulations, then the game will be fine. Boss fights are gonna be boss fights, after all.

You ask Kumatora how they are, while keeping your eye on the mutant cat. He seems to be looking up at Tiny Pete now, with that interested gleam in his eye.

"Huh? Oh, they're fine, sempai. Fabiola-san needed a bullet wound to her arm addressed, but it was only a gash, nothing really serious. We had to get Garcia-san to a medical facility, though - we think he might have accidentally shot himself with a tranq gun a couple of times."

...Sorry, Fabiola. That'll be another lesson you'll have to teach your Master on your own.

"That's what I have," Kumatora says after a moment, uncertain of how to finish off things, opting to salute again. "I'm...I'm not sure what happened myself, sempai, but is it really true that you cleared out an entire ballroom on your own? There were a lot of bodies inside, some of them heavily armed.."

You could see Kyuubey looking at you as Kumatora asks you this.

How do you respond?

So you didn't read the previous posts quoted before replying huh? Could have saved yourself some post time by realising I acknowledge Warhammer references have existed all along but originally seemed to be running parallel to the bad guy's plot. I was hoping it was 40k inspired rather then this direct business, golden weapons causing blood thirst and madness as a method employed by our opponents. It fits well enough into our themes much like Asir corps combat drugs in Max Payne. A cool nod.

Like I said, I don't mind the pace, if we need to step it up we could have skipped the whole demon part and made the fight with Kilgore as tough as we expected but never got.

Well, in any case I've got my point across. See how things work out I guess and I'll shut up about it. I don't even really dislike warhammer references, I just came here for some hard boiled meguca.

Arguable. We have no idea if it could have ever been reversed, and weight of bodies is a hell of a thing to deal with in a fight. In the very first fight of the Quest we brutally offed a girl that we KNEW was under a confirmed Witch's mark, despite Mami asking us to try to stop and help her. In a ballroom full of bloody demons, that is NOT the time to try for a mass exorcism spell (that we don't even know if works in the Madoka-verse).

Couldn't be helped, perhaps if we were a little more like Mami and not so used to death with my view our actions against the Harem as the golden weapons influence going against our rational nature. I think 'confirmed hostile' sums up our opinion nicely.

The moral solution would probably have been to disable or stun them while blinded, but the efficient cold solution (even if we were berserking at the time) was to cleanly kill them without messing about.

I think it's in keeping we don't feel bad about killing them, perhaps pity for what happened to them to become that way, but the blame is solely on Killgore. Mami will have to guilt trip us to make us admit we fucked that up. Iori could guilt trip us too, but we'll just view her as naive.

You narrow your eyes at Kyuubey, before turning back to Kumatora, the rest of her own squad seemingly hanging on to your every word, just like her. You sigh slightly as you realize that this is not exactly a debriefing, as those happen in the privacy of your appointed Incubator - but you feel that any embellishment would reflect badly on you and on your current reputation.

So you tell it straight. You tell them the events of what happened, barring a few details about the Golden Desert Eagle that Kyuubey would probably want to hear himself in strict confidence. You point out just where what happened, including the chase that had Kyoko's back broken and Tiny Pete mopping up the place with Kilgore. It makes for a great story, if it weren't for the fact that a lot of people died in its inception.

It's as you recount the assignment in full that you take off the Desert Eagle's shoulder holster, unbuckling the straps quickly and slipping it off your arm - before all but dropping it right on top of your boss, the white furry creature jumping easily to the side to avoid getting crushed.

You murmur that you've finished his little experiment for him, and that he can take the gun back. You'd use a much pointed but also a cruder way of saying that statement, but there are people who look up to you that are present.

"...Very well. I've interesting findings about what happened, but I understand if you'd like to know about them in a later time, at a later place." Kyuubey says after a moment, placing a paw on top of the empty golden firearm and making it disappear. "Miss Iori is safe, as well as her two friends. Mami is with Shijou-san - apparently they've found a mutual friend injured in the proceedings. They've taken him to the hospital, too."

I honestly think the decision to "clean" the room was justifiable. Homura cannot clear mindcontrol ao I soubt Chiaki could either. 20+ hostiles with knives and 10+ with guns against a Magical Girl? Trying to subdue them all would have ended up with a broken soul gem due to sheer numbers.

All you want to do right now is to leave the mansion, right now, and take a very long shower.

You shout at Kyuubey, over your shoulder, to have Tiny Pete delivered back to Warehouse #0069. You shout at him to give Kyouko a raise on her current pay grade, and to also provide something special for Misaka.

Although...maybe you could do with the company, even if just for tonight. At least you don't have to drink alone.

May as well thank Misaka for Pete's help, and welcome in the new girl to damnation.

All of them. We will have a party. Hell, we'll do it in the Silent Room if they won't let her out. We'll have some good times, talk with Misaka about the huge-as-fuck battlebrobot, maybe taste some of Mami's divine pancakes, and have some more Soul-Gem drinking with Midori. We can convince her to work for us, and impress Mami with our lack-of-killing-Midori.

I 100% guarantee that drinking alone will mean drinking with Pinky. I only 90% say that drinking with others will bring her out.

That said, I actually agree that alone is good. Friends are good, but we don't want to forget who we are. We could also use a long chat with Pinky, honestly.

If that's not an option, Midori is my choice. Can we bring Midori for Midori, if we do that? Please?

As you make your way out of the mansion, it's then that you remember a certain green-haired girl you kneecapped and left somewhat hanging in the Silent Room, over at Headquarters. You've finished interrogating her, for the most part - but she's still under your custody. You still have her Soul Gem, after all - it's not like she could leave without it.

What the hell, you think. You could pay her a visit, if only to avoid drinking alone for the night. You don't trust yourself all that much at the moment - and you think Mami and Misaka would probably be better off not having to deal with you, at least not for tonight.

And that's it for the Kilgore assignment. Thank you everyone who participated!

I'd say we need to get to a bar and drink away the feeling we lost a bit more of our soul tonight to the gun. Mami is probably still going to give bad guilt vibes, Misaka is probably more in a party mood which isn't what we're looking for example.

I'd say [x] Drink alone, but I suspect the players don't want that, so [x] Midori as we've not chilled with her.

We need a comfy chair, some whisky and some premium smokes to help forget about things.
